That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the disturbances
That nature works, and of her cures; which give me
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,
Or to be my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.⁶

2 Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus pour'd forth

Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restor'd:
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built Lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall never—

Enter Two Servants with a Chest.

Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even now
Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest;
'Tis of some wreck.

Cer. Set't down, let's look on it.

2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate'er it be,
'Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight;
If the sea's stomach be o'ercharg'd with gold,
It is a good constraint of fortune, that
It belches upon us.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.

Cer. How close 'tis caulk'd and bitum'd!—
Did the sea cast it up?

1 The principals are the strongest rafters in the roof of a building.

2 All-to is a common augmentative in old language. The word topple, which means tumble, is used again in Macbeth:—

'Though castles topple on their warders' heads.'

3 Husbandry here signifies economical prudence. So in Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 3:—

'—borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.'

And in Henry V.:—

'For our bad neighbours make us early stirrers,

'Which is both heathful and good husbandry.'

4 The gentlemen rose early because they were in lodgings, which stood exposed near the sea. They wonder to find Lord Cerimon stirring, because he had rich tire about him, meaning perhaps a bed more richly and comfortably furnished, where he could have slept warm and secure in defiance of the tempest. Steevens thinks that the reasoning of these gentlemen should have led them rather to say, 'such towers about you,' i. e. a house or castle that could safely resist the assaults of the weather.

5 i. e. knowledge.

6 Mr. Steevens had seen an old Flemish print in which Death was exhibited in the act of plundering a miser of his bags, and the Fool (discriminated by his bauble, &c.) was standing behind and grinning at the process. The Dance of Death appears to have been

Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open,
Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it.
O, you most potent god! what's here? a corse!

1 Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and entreasur'd

With bags of spices full! A passport too!

Apollo, perfect me i' the characters!

[Unfolds a Scroll.

Here I give to understand

[Reads.

(If e'er this coffin drive a-land,)'

I, king Pericles, have lost

This queen, worth all our mundane cost.

Who finds her, give her burying;

She was the daughter of a king:

Besides this treasure for a fee,

The gods requite his charity!

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for woe!—This chanc'd to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;
For look how fresh she looks!—They were too rough,

That threw her in the sea. Make fire within;

Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,

And yet the fire of life kindle again

The overpressed spirits. I have heard

Of an Egyptian, had nine hours lien dead,

By good appliance was recover'd.

Enter a Servant, with Boxes, Napkins, and Fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths.—

The rough and woful music that we have,

Cause it to sound, 'beseech you.

The vial once more;—how thou stirr'st, thou block!

The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—

Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes; a warmth

Breathes out of her; she hath not been entranc'd

Above five hours. See, how she 'gins to blow

Into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The heavens, sir,
Through you, increase our wonder, and set up
Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,
Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
Which Pericles hath lost,

Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;^{*}

The diamonds of a most praised water

Appear to make the world twice rich. O, live, anciently a popular exhibition. A venerable and aged clergyman informed Mr. Steevens that he had once been a spectator of it. The dance consisted of Death's contrivances to surprise the Merry Andrew, and of the Merry Andrew's efforts to elude the stratagems of Death, by whom at last he was overpowered; his finale being attended with such circumstances as mark the exit of the Dragon of Wantley. It should seem that the general idea of this serio-comic pas-de-deux had been borrowed from the ancient Dance of Machabre, commonly called the Dance of Death, which appears to have been anciently acted in churches like the Moralities. The subject was a frequent ornament of cloisters both here and abroad. The reader will remember the beautiful series of wood-cuts of the Dance of Death, attributed, (though erroneously,) to Holbein. Mr. Douce is in possession of an exquisite set of initial letters, representing the same subject; in one of which the Fool is engaged in a very stout combat with his adversary, and is actually buffeting him with a bladder filled with peas or pebbles, an instrument used by modern Merry Andrews.

7 In Twine's translation of the story of Apollonius of Tyre this uncommon phrase, a-land, is repeatedly used. In that version it is to Cerimon's pupil, Machaon, and not to Cerimon himself, that the lady is indebted for her recovery.

8 So in the Tempest:—

'The fringed curtains of thine eye advance,
And say what thou seest yond?'

And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
Rare as you seem to be! [She moves.

Thai. O, dear Diana, Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?

2 Gent. Is not this strange?

1 Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, gentle neighbours;
Lend me your hands: to the next chamber bear her.
Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come;
And Æsculapius guide us!

[Exeunt carrying THAISA away.]

SCENE III. Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.
Enter PERICLES, CLEON, DIONYZA, LYCHORIDA, and MARINA.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expir'd, and Tyrus stands
In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt you mortality,^a
Yet glance full wand'ringly on us.

Dion. O, your sweet queen!
That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,

To have bless'd mine eyes!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end Must be as 'tis. My babe Marina (whom
For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so) here
I charge your charity withal, and leave her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord, but think^a
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
(For which the people's prayers still fall upon you,) Must in your child be thought on. If neglect
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you;
Your honour and your goodness teach me credit,^a Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will^a in't. So I take my leave.

1 This is from the Confessio Amantis :—

'And first hir eye up she caste,
And when she more of strength caught,
Her armes both forth she straughte;
Held up hir honde, and piteouslie
She wepe, and said, Where am I?
Where is my lord? What worlde is this?'

2 The old copy reads :—

'Your shakes of fortune, though they haunt you mortality,

Yet glance full wand'ringly,' &c.

The folios have 'though they hate you.' The emendation is by Steevens, who cites the following illustrations :—'Omnibus telis fortuna proposita sit vita nostra.'—Cicero Epist. Fam.

'The shot of accident or dart of chance.' Othello.
'The dings and arrows of outrageous fortune.' Hamlet.
'I am glad, though you have taken a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.'

Merry Wives of Windsor.

The sense of the passage seems to be, all the malice of fortune is not confined to yourself, though her arrows strike deeply at you, yet wandering from their mark, they sometimes glance on us; as at present, when the uncertain state of Tyre deprives us of your company at Tharsus.

3 i. e. be satisfied that we cannot forget the benefits
you have bestowed on us.

4 The old copy reads, 'teach me to it:' the alteration was made by Steevens.

5 i. e. appear wilful, perverse by such conduct. The old copy reads in the preceding line :—

'Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine,' &c.

Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Who shall not be more dear to my respect,
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.

Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge of the shore;

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune;^a and
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dear'st madam.—O, no tears,
Lychorida, no tears:

Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House. Enter CERIMON and THAISA.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,
Lay with you in your coffer: which are now
At your command. Know you the character?

Thai. It is my lord's.

That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,
Even on my eaning^a time; but whether there
Delivered or no, by the holy gods,
I cannot rightly say: But since King Pericles,
My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again,
A vestal livery will I take me to,
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this your purpose as you speak,
Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may 'bide until your date expire^a
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks, that's all:
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter GOWER.^a

Gow. Imagine Pericles arriv'd at Tyre,
Welcom'd and settled to his own desire.
His woful queen leave at Ephesus,
Unto Diana there a votaress.
Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast growing scene must find^b
At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters; who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,
Which makes her both the heart and place!^c

The corruption is obvious, as appears from a subsequent passage :—

'This ornament, that makes me look so dismal'

Will I, my lov'd Marina, clip to form,' &c.

6 i. e. Insidious waves that wear a treacherous smile

'Subdola quem ridet placidi peflacla ponti.'

Lucret. li. v. 558.

7 The quarto, 1619, and the folio, 1664, which was probably printed from it, both read eaning. The first quarto reads learning. Steevens asserts that eaning is a term only applicable to sheep when they produce their young, and substituted 'yearning,' which he interprets
'her groaning time.' But it should be observed that to can or yearn, in our elder language, as in the Anglo-Saxon, signified to bring forth young, without any particular reference to sheep. I have therefore preferred the reading in the text to Steevens's conjecture.

8 i. e. until you die. So in Romeo and Juliet :—

'The date is out of such prolixity.'

Again, in the same play :—

'—and expire the term

Of a desipied life.'

And in the Rape of Lucrece :—

'An expir'd date, cancell'd ere well begun.'

9 This chorus, and the two following scenes, in the old editions, are printed as part of the third act.

10 The same expression occurs in the chorus to The Winter's Tale :—

'—your patience this allowing,

I turn my glass, and give my scene such growing

As you had slept between.'

11 The old copies read—

'Which makes high both the art and place.'

The emendation is by Steevens. We still use the heart

Of general wonder. But alack !
That monster envy, oft the wrack
Of earned praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife.
And in this kind hath our Cleon
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
Even ripe for marriage fight ; this maid
Hight Philoten : and it is said
For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be :
Be't when she wear'd the sleided¹ silk
With fingers long, small, white as milk ;
Or when she would with sharp needl² wound
The cambric, which she made more sound
By hurting it ; or when to the lute
She sung, and made the night-bird mute,
That still records³ with moan ; or when
She would with rich and constant pen Vail⁴ to her mistress Dian ; still
This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute⁵ Marina : so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter.
The sooner her vile thoughts to stead,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead ;
And cursed Dionyza hath
The pregnant⁶ instrument of wrath
Prest for this blow. The unborn event
I do commend to your content :⁷
Only I carry winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme ;
Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my way.—

of oak for the central part of it, and the heart of the land in much such another sense. Place here signifies residence. So in A Lover's Complaint :—

'Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place.'

¹ 'Sleided silk' is unwrought silk, prepared for weaving by passing it through the weaver's aley or reed-comb.

² The old copies read needle, but the metre shows that we should read needl. The word is thus abbreviated in a subsequent passage in the first quarto. See King John, Act v. Sc. 2.

³ To record anciently signified to sing. Thus in Sir Philip Sydney's Ourania, by [Nicholas Breton] 1606 :—

'Recording songs unto the Deitie.'

The word is still used by bird fanciers.

⁴ Vail is probably a misprint. Stevens suggests that we should read 'Hail.' Malone proposes to substitute 'vail.'

⁵ I. e. highly accomplished, perfect. So in Antony and Cleopatra :—

'— at sea

He is an absolute master.'

And in Green's Tu Quoque :—'From an absolute and most complete gentleman, to a most absurd, ridiculous, and fond lover.'

⁶ Pregnant in this instance means apt, quick. Prest is ready.

⁷ 'I do commend to your content.'

Stevens conjectures that the poet wrote consent instead of content ; but observes that perhaps the passage as it stands may mean 'I wish you to find content in that portion of our play which has not yet been exhibited.'

⁸ The first quarto reads :—

'— Let not conscience,

Which is but cold, inflame thy love bosome,
Enflame too nicelie, nor let pittie,' &c.

Malone reads :—

'— Let not conscience,

Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom,
Inflame too nicelie, nor let pity,' &c.

Stevens proposed to omit the words, 'Inflame too nicelie,' and 'which even,' adding the pronoun that, in the following manner :—

'— Let not conscience,

Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom ;
Nor let that pity women have cast off
Melt thee, but be a soldier to thy purpose.'

Dionyza does appear,
With Leonine, a murderer.

[Exit.

SCENE I. Tharsus. An open Place near the Seashore. Enter DIONYZA AND LEONINE.

Dion. Thy oath remember ; thou hast sworn to do it ;

'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing¹ the world so soon,
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflaming love, thy bosom
Inflame too nicelie ;² nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do't ; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her.
Here

Weeping she comes for her old nurse's death.³
Thou art resolv'd ?

Leon.

I am resolv'd.

Enter MARINA, with a Basket of Flowers.

Mar. No, no, I will rob Tellus of her weed,
To strew thy green¹⁰ with flowers: the yellows, blues,
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall, as a chaplet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer days do last.¹¹ Ah me ! poor maid
Born in a tempest, when my mother died,
This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring¹² me from my friends.

Dion. How now, Marina ! why do you keep alone ?¹³
How chance my daughter is not with you ? Do not Consume your blood with sorrowing :¹⁴ you have
A nurse of me. Lord ! how your favour's¹⁵ chang'd
With this unprofitable wo ! Come, come ;
Give me your wreath of flowers. Ere the sea mar it,
Walk forth with Leonine ;¹⁶ the air is quick there,
Piercing, and sharpens well the stomach. Come :
Leonine, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you ;

I'll not bereave you of your servant.

Dion.

Come, come ;

I love the king your father, and yourself,

The reading I have given is sufficiently intelligible, and deviates less from the old copy. Nicely here means tenderly, fondly.

⁹ The old copy reads :—

'Here she comes weeping for her onely mistress's death.' As Marina had been trained in music, letters, &c. and had gained all the graces of education, Lychorida could not have been her only mistress. The suggestion and emendation are Dr. Percy's.

¹⁰ This is the reading of the quarto copy ; the folio reads grave. Weed, in old language, meant garment.

¹¹ So in Cymbeline :—

'— with fairest flowers,

While summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,

I'll sweeten thy sad grave.'

The old copy reads, 'Shall as a carpet hang,' &c. The emendation is by Stevens.

¹² Thus the earliest copy. The second quarto, and all subsequent impressions, read :—

'Hurrying me from my friends.'

Whirring or whirring had formerly the same meaning ; a bird that flies with a quick motion is still said to whirr away. The verb to whirry is used in the ballad of Robin Goodfellow, Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 203 :—

'More swift than winds away I go,

O'er hedge and lands,

Thro' pools and ponds,

I whirry, laughing ho, ho, ho.'

Whirring is often used by Chapman in his version of the Iliad ; so in book xvii. :—

'— through the Greeks and Ilians they raypt

The whirring chariot.'

¹³ So in Macbeth :

'How now, my lord ! why do you keep alone ?'

And in King Henry IV. Part II.

'How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother ?'
Milton employs a similar form of words in Comus, v. 508 :—

'How chance she is not in your company ?'

¹⁴ In King Henry VI. Part II. we have 'blood-consuming sighs.'

¹⁵ Countenance, look.

¹⁶ I. e. ere the sea by the coming in of the tide mar your walk.

With more than foreign heart.¹ We every day
Expect him here : when he shall come, and find
Our paragon to all reports,² thus blasted,
He will repent the breadth of his great voyage ;
Blame both my lord and me, that we have ta'en
No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you,
Walk, and be cheerful once again ; reserve³
That excellent complexion, which did steal
The eyes of young and old. Care not for me ;
I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go ;
But yet I have no desire to it.

Dion. Come, come, I know 'tis good for you,
Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least ;
Remember what I have said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.
Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while ;
Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood :
What ! I must have a care of you.

Mar. Thanks, sweet madam.—
[Exit DIONYZA.]

Is this wind westerly that blows ?

Leon. South-west.
Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.

Leon. Was't so ?
Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear,
But cry'd, Good seamen ! to the sailors, galling
His kingly hands with hauling of the ropes ;
And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea
That almost burst the deck.

Leon. When was this ?
Mar. When I was born :
Never was waves nor wind more violent ;
And from the ladder-tackle washes off
A canvass-climber.⁴ Ha ! says one, wilt out ?
And with a dropping industry they skip
From stem to stern : the boatswain whistles, and
The master calls and trebles their confusion.⁵

Leon. Come, say your prayers.
Mar. What mean you ?
Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,
I grant it : Pray ! but be not tedious,
For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me ?
Leon. To satisfy my lady.
Mar. Why should she have me kill'd ?
Now, as I can remember, by my troth,
I never did her hurt in all my life ;
I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn
To any living creature : believe me, la,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly :
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wept for it. How have I offended,
Wherein my death might yield her profit, or
My life imply her danger ?

Leon. My commission
Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.
You are well-favour'd, and your looks foreshew
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,

1 That is, with the same warmth of affection as if I was his countryman.

2 Our fair charge, whose beauty was once equal to all that fame said of it. So in Othello :

' ————— He hath achiev'd a maid

That paragons description and wild fame.

3 Reserve has here the force of preserve. So in Shakspeare's thirty-second Sonnet :—

' Reserve them for my love, not for their rhymes.'

4 I. e. a sailor, one who climbs the mast to furl or unfurl the canvass or sails.

5 Mr. Steevens thus regulates and reads this passage :
' That almost burst the deck, and from the ladder-tackle
Wash'd off a canvass-climber. Ha ! says one,
Wilt out ? and, with a dropping industry
They skip from stem to stern : The boatswain whistles,
The master calls, and trebles their confusion.

Leon. And when was this ?

Mar. It was when I was born :
Never was waves nor wind more violent.

Leon. Come, say your prayers speedily.'

6 Old copy reads 'soguing thieves.'

7 The Spanish armada perhaps furnished this name.

When you caught hurt in parting two that fought :
Good sooth, it show'd well in you : do so now :
Your lady seeks my life : come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,
And will despatch.

Enter Pirates, whilst MARINA is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain ! [LEONINE runs away.]

2 Pirate. A prize ! a prize !

3 Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part. Come, let's have her aboard suddenly.

[Exit Pirates with MARINA.]

SCENE II. The same. Re-enter LEONINE.

Leon. These roving⁶ thieves serve the great pirate
Valdes ;⁷

And they have seiz'd Marina. Let her go :
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear she's dead,
And thrown into the sea.—But I'll see further ;
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd, must by me be slain.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. Mitylene. A Room in a Brothel.
Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Boul't.

Boul't. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly ; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this mart, by being too wenchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do ; and with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore, let's have fresh ones, whate'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Bawd. Thou say'st true : 'tis not the bringing up of poor bastards, as I think I have brought up some eleven—

Boul't. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again.⁸ But shall I search the market ?

Bawd. What else, man ? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sadden.

Pand. Thou say'st true ; they are too unwholesome o' conscience. The poor Transilvanian is lead, that lay with the little baggage.

Boul't. Ay, she quickly pooped him ; she made him roast meat for worms :—but I'll go search the market.

[Exit BOULT.]

Pand. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.

Bawd. Why to give over, I pray you ? is it a shame to get when we are old ?

Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity ; nor the commodity wages not with the danger ;⁹ therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep

Don Pedro de Valdes was an admiral in that fleet, and had the command of the great galleon of Andalusia.
His ship being disabled, he was taken by Sir Francis
Drake on the 22d of July, 1588, and sent to Dartmouth.
This play was not written, we may conclude, till after that period. The making one of this Spaniard's ancestors a pirate, was probably relished by the audience in those days. There is a particular account of this Valdes in Robert Greene's Spanish Masquerado, 1589. He was then prisoner in England.

8 I have brought up (i. e. educated,) says the bawd, some eleven. Yes, answers Boul't, to eleven, (i. e. as far as eleven years of age,) and then brought them down again. The latter clause of the sentence requires no explanation. In the play of The Weather, by John Heywood, 4to. b1k. l. Merry Report says :—

' Oft time is sene both in court and towne, Longe be women a bryngynge up, and some brought down.'

9 I. e. is not equal to it. So in Othello :—

' To wake and reage a danger profitless.'

And in Antony and Cleopatra, vol. viii. :—

' ————— his taunts and honours
Wag'd equal with him.'

our door hatch'd.¹ Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods, will be strong with us for giving over.

Baud. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.

Pand. As well as we! ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; it's no calling:—but here comes Boul.

Enter the Pirates, and BOULT, dragging in MARINA.

Boul. Come your ways. [To MARINA.]—My masters, you say she's a virgin?

I Pirate. O, sir, we doubt it not.

Boul. Master, I have gone thorough² for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Baud. Boul, has she any qualities?

Boul. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

Baud. What's her price, Boul?

Boul. I cannot be bated one doit of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw³ in her entertainment.

[Exeunt PANDER and Pirates.]

Baud. Boul, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity; and cry, He that will give most, shall have her first. Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boul. Performance shall follow. [Exit BOULT.]

Mar. Alack, that Leonine was so slack, so slow! (He should have struck, not spoke;) or that these pirates

(Not enough barbarous) had not overboard Thrown me, to seek my mother!

Baud. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Baud. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Baud. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault, To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die.

Baud. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Baud. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Baud. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Baud. Marry, whip thee, gosling: I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Baud. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up.—Boul's returned.

Enter BOULT.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?

Boul. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice.

Baud. And I pray thee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boul. 'Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.

Baud. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.

Boul. To-night, to night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers⁴ i' the hams?

Baud. Who? Monsieur Veroles?

Boul. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Baud. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it.⁵ I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.⁶

Boul. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should lodge them with this sign.⁷

Baud. Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me; you must seem to do that fearfully, which you commit willingly; to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pity in your lovers: Seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere⁸ profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Boul. O, take her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Baud. Thou say'st true, i' faith, so they must: for your bride goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boul. 'Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint,— Baud. Thou may'st cut a morse⁹ off the spit.

Boul. I may so.

Baud. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boul. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Baud. Boul, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have: you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

The reader may see the cut and the raillery in the variorum Shakspeare.

2 i. e. bid a high price for her.

3 i. e. unripe, unskilful. So in Hamlet:—'And yet but raw neither in respect of his full sail.'

4 To cower is to sink or crouch down. Thus in King Henry VI.—

'The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands.'

Again in Gammer Gurton's Needle:—

'They cower so o'er the coles, their eies be blear'd with smoke.'

5 i. e. renovate it. So in Cymbeline, Act i. Sc. 2:—

'O, disloyal thing!

Thou should'st repair my youth.'

6 The allusion is to the French coin écus de soleil, crowns of the sun. The meaning of the passage is merely this, 'That the French knight will seek the shade of their house to scatter his money there.'

7 'If a traveller from every part of the globe were to assemble in Mitylene, they would all resort to this house, while we had such a sign to it as this virgin.' A similar eulogy is pronounced on Imogen in Cymbeline: 'She's a good sign; but I have seen small reflection of her wit.'

8 i. e. an absolute, a certain profit.

1 A hatch is a half door, sometimes placed within a street door, preventing access farther than the entry of a house. When the top of a hatch was guarded by a row of spikes, no person could reach over and undo its fastening, which was always within side, and near its bottom. This domestic portcullis perhaps was necessary to our ancient brothels. Secured within such a barrier, Mrs. Overdone could parley with her customers, refuse admittance to the shabby visitor, bargain with the rich gallant, defy the beadle, or keep the constable at bay. From having been her usual defence, the hatch became the unequivocal denotement of her trade; for though the hatch with a flat top was a constant attendant on buttries in great families, colleges, &c. the hatch with spikes on it was peculiar to early houses of amorous entertainment, and Mr. Steevens was informed that the bagnios of Dublin were not long since so defended. Malone exhibited a copy of a wood cut, prefixed to an old pamphlet entitled Holland's Leaguer, 4to. 1632, in which is a representation of a celebrated brothel, on the Bank side, near the Globe play-house, in which he imagined the hatch was delineated. Steevens has pleasantly bantered him upon it.

Boult. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels,¹ as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly-inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Baud. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, Untied I still my virgin knot will keep. Diana, aid my purpose!

Baud. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.
Enter CLEON and DIONYZA.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O, Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world, I'd give it to undo the deed.² O, lady, Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess To equal any single crown o' the earth, I' the justice of compare! O, villain Leonine, Whom thou hast poison'd too!

If thou had'st drunk to him, it had been a kindness Becoming well thy feat:³ what canst thou say, When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates To foster it, nor ever to preserve.

She died at night; I'll say so. Who can cross it? Unless you play the impious innocent,⁴

And for an honest attribute, cry out, She died by foul play.

Cle. O, go to. Well, well, Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think The pretty wrens of Tharsus will fly hence, And open this to Pericles. I do shame To think of what a noble strain you are, And of how coward a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding Who ever but his approbation added, Though not his pre-consent, he did not flow From honourable courses.

Dion. Be it so, then: Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead, Nor none can know, Leonine being gone.

1 Thunder is supposed to have the effect of rousing eels from the mud, and so render them more easy to take in stormy weather. Marston alludes to this in his Satires:—

'They are nought but eels that never will appear Till that tempestuous winds, or thunder, tears Their slimy beds.'

2 So in Macbeth:—'Wake Duncan with this knocking:—Ay, 'would, thou couldst!' In Pericles, as in Macbeth, the wife is more criminal than the husband, whose repentance follows immediately on the murder.

3 The old copy reads face. The emendation is Mason's. Feat is deed, or exploit.

4 An innocent was formerly a common appellation for an idiot. She calls him an impious simpleton, because such a discovery would touch the life of one of his own family, his wife. This is the ingenious interpretation of Mason; but I incline to think with Mason that we should read, '—the pious innocent.'

5 The old copy reads, 'She did disdain my child.' But Marina was not of a disdainful temper. Her excellence indeed eclipsed the meaner qualities of her companion, i. e. in the language of the poet, distained them. In Tarquin and Lucrece we meet with the same verb again:—

'Were Tarquin night, (as he is but night's child,) The silver-shining queen he would distain.'

The verb is several times used by Shakespeare in the sense of to eclipse, to throw into the shade; and not in that of to disgrace, as Steevens asserts.

The same cause for Dionyza's hatred to Marina is also alleged in Twine's translation:—'The people be-holding the beautie and comeliness of Tharsia, said: Happy is the father that hath Tharsia to his daughter; but her companion that goeth with her is foule and ill-favoured.' When Dionysades heard Tharsia commended, and her owne daughter, Philomacia, so dispraised, she returned home wonderful wrath,⁶ &c.

She did *distain*⁶ my child, and stood between Her and her fortunes: None would look on her, But cast their gazes on Marina's face; Whilst ours was blurted⁷ at, and held a malkin,⁸ Not worth the time of day. It pierc'd me thorough; And though you call my course unnatural, You not your child well loving, yet I find, It greets me⁹ as an enterprise of kindness, Perform'd to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles, What should he say? We wept after her hearse, And even yet we mourn; her monument Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs In glittering golden characters express A general praise to her, and care in us At whose expense 'tis done.

Cle. Thou art like the harpy, Which, to betray, doth with thine angel's face Seize with thine eagle's talons.⁹

Dion. You are like one, that superstitiously Doth swear to the gods, that winter kills the flies;¹⁰ But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the Monument of MARINA at Tharsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short;

Sail seas in cockles, have, and wish but for't;

Making¹¹ (to take your imagination,) From bourn to bourn, region to region.

By you being pardon'd, we commit no crime

To use one language, in each several clime,

Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you,

To learn of me, who stand i' the gap to teach you

The stages of our story. Pericles

Is now again thwarting the wayward seas;¹²

(Attended on by many a lord and knight,) To see his daughter, all his life's delight.

Old Escanes, whom Helicanus late¹³

Advanc'd in time to great and high estate,

Is left to govern. Bear you it in mind,

Old Helicanus goes along behind.

Well sailing ships, and bounteous winds, have brought

This king to Tharsus (think this pilot-thought;¹⁴

So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow on,)

To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.¹⁵

6 This contemptuous expression frequently occurs in our ancient dramas. So in King Edward III. 1596:—

'This day hath set derision on the French,

And all the world will blurt and scorn at us.'

7 A coarse wench, not worth a good morrow.

8 It greets me⁹ appears to mean it salutes me, or is grateful to me. So in King Henry VIII.:—

'Would, I had no being,

If this salute my blood a jot.'

9 'With thine angel's face,' &c. means 'You having an angel's face, a look of innocence, have at the same time an eagle's talons.'

10 This passage appears to mean, 'You are so affect-edly humane, that you would appeal to heaven against the cruelty of winter in killing the flies. Superstitious is explained by Johnson, scrupulous beyond need.'—Boswell.

11 So in a former passage:—'O, make for Tharsus.' Making, &c. is travelling with the hope of engaging your attention) from one division or boundary of the world to another; i. e. we hope to interest you by the variety of our scene, and the different countries through which we pursue our story.—We still use a phrase exactly corresponding with take your imagination; i. e. 'to take one's fancy.'

12 So in King Henry V.:—

'— and there being seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts

Atwart the seas.'

13 These lines are strangely misplaced in the old copy. The transposition and corrections are by Steevens.

14 This is the reading of the old copy, which Malone altered to 'his pilot thought.' I do not see the necessity of the change. The passage as it is will bear the interpretation given to the correction:—'Let your imagination steer with him, be his pilot, and, by accompanying him in his voyage, think this pilot-thought.'

15 Who has left Tharsus before her father's arrival there.

Like moles and shadows see them move awhile;
Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

Dumb Show.

*Enter at one Door, PERICLES, with his Train;
CLEON and DIONYZA at the other. CLEON shows
PERICLES the Tomb of MARINA; whereat PERI-CLES makes lamentation, puts on Sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then CLEON and DIONYZA retire.*

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show!
This borrow'd passion stands for true old wo;¹
And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,
With sighs shot through, and biggest tears o'ershow'r'd,

Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears
Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;
He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears
A tempest, which his mortal vessel² tears,
And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit³
The epitaph is for Marina writ
By wicked Dionyza.

[Reads the Inscription on MARINA'S Monument.
*The fairest, sweetest,⁴ and best, lies here,
Who wither'd in her spring of year.
She was of Tyrus, the king's daughter,
On whom foul death hath made this slaughter;
Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,
Thetis,⁵ being proud, swallow'd some part o' the earth:
Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd,
Hath Thetis birth-child on the heavens bestow'd:
Wherefore she does (and swears she'll never stint,)⁶
Make raging battery upon shores of fount.
No visor does become black villany,
So well as soft and tender flattery.
Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,
And bear his courses to be ordered
By lady fortune; while our scenes display
His daughter's wo and heavy well-a-day,
In her unholy service. Patience, then,
And think y^e now are all in Mitylene.*] [Exit.

SCENE V. Mitylene. A Street before the Brothel.
Enter, from the Brothel, Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Did you ever hear the like?
2 Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.
1 Gent. But to have divinity preached there! did you ever dream of such a thing?
2 Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more hawdyhouses: shall we go hear the vestals sing?
1 Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous;
but I am out of the road of rutting, for ever.

[Exit.

SCENE VI. The same. A Room in the Brothel.
Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Fie, fie upon her: she is able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation. We

1 i. e. for such tears as were shed when the world being in its infancy, dissimulation was unknown. Perhaps, however, we ought to read, 'true told wo.'

2 So in King Richard III. —
'O, then began the tempest of my soul.'
What is here called his mortal vessel (i. e. his body) is styled by Cleopatra her mortal house.

3 'Now be pleased to know.' So in Gower: —
'In which the lord hath to him writte
That he would understand and witte.'

4 Sweetest must be read here as a monosyllable, as highest in the Tempest: — 'Highest queen of state,' &c.
Steevens observes that we might more elegantly read, omitting the conjunction and —

'The fairest, sweetest, best, lies here.'

5 The inscription alludes to the violent storm which accompanied the birth of Marina; at which time the sea, proudly overswelling its bounds, swallowed, as is usual in such hurricanes, some part of the earth. The poet ascribed the swelling of the sea to the pride which Thetis felt at the birth of Marina in her element, and supposes that the earth, being afraid to be overflowed, bestowed this birth-child of Thetis on the heavens; and must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fiment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-reasons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should cheapen a kiss of her.

Boult. 'Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll disfur-nish us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swear-ers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. 'Faith, there's no way to be rid o'n't, but by the way to the pox. Here comes the Lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and lown, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now? How? a dozen of virginities?

Bawd. Now, the gods to-bless⁸ your honour!

Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would — but there never came her like in Mitylene.

Lys. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou would'st say.

Bawd. Your honour knows what 'tis to say well enough.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth.

Boult. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but —

Lys. What, pr'ythee?

Boult. O, sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to an anchor⁹ to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;
— never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. 'Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you; — leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Bawd. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [To MAR. whom she takes aside.

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. 'Pray you, without any more virginal!¹⁰ that Thetis, in revenge, makes raging battery against the shores. — Mason.

6 i. e. never cease.

7 This is Justice Shallow's mode of asking the price of a different kind of commodity: —

'How a score of ewes now?'

8 The use of to in composition with verbs is very common in Gower and Chaucer.

9 The old copy, which both Steevens and Malone considered corrupt in this place, reads, 'That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives good report to a number to be chaste.' I have ventured to substitute an anchor, i. e. hermit, or anchorite. The word being formerly written ancher, ancher, and even anker, it is evident that in old MSS. it might readily be mistaken for a number. The word is used by the Player Queen in Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2: —

'An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope.'

It is evident that some character contrasted to bawd is required by the context.

10 This uncommon adjective is again used in Coriolanus: —

'— the virginal palms of your daughters.'

fencing, with you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Bawd. My lord, she's not paced¹ yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together.

[Exeunt Bawd, PANDER, and BOULT.]

Lys. Go thy ways.—Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. What I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester² at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else, look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place. Come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good That thought you worthy of it.

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—be sage.³

Mar. For me,

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune Hath plac'd me here within this loathsome stie, Where, since I came, diseases have been sold Dearer than physic,—O, that the good gods Would set me free from this unhallow'd place, Though they did change me to the meanest bird That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think

Thou could'st have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou could'st.

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind, Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee:

Persever still in that clear⁴ way thou goest, And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughten That I come with no ill intent; for to me The very doors and windows savour vilely. Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue,⁵ and I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.—

1 A term from the equestrian art; but still in familiar language applied to persons, chiefly in a bad sense, with its compound through-paced.

2 i. e. a wanton.

3 Lysimachus must be supposed to say this ensnaringly.—Proceed with your fine moral discourse.

4 Clear is pure, innocent. Thus in The Two Noble Kinsmen:—

For the sake
Of clear virginity, be advocate
For us and our distresses.

So in The Tempest:—

nothing but heart's sorrow,
And a clear life ensuing.

thy mother was
A piece of virtue.

So in Antony and Cleopatra, alluding to Octavia:—

Let not the piece of virtue, which is set Betwixt us.

6 i. e. under the cope or canopy of heaven.

7 Steevens thinks that there may be some allusion

Hold; here's more gold for thee.—

A curse upon him, die he like a thief,
That robs thee of thy goodness! If thou hear'st from me,
It shall be for thy good.

[As LYSIMACHUS is putting up his Purse, BOULT enters.]

Boult. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Avant, thou damned door-keeper! Your house,

But for this virgin that doth prop it up,
Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away!

[Exit LYSIMACHUS.]

Boult. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope,⁶ shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your way. We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Bawd.

Bawd. How now! what's the matter?

Boult. Worse and worse, mistress; she has here spoken holy words to the Lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. O, abominable!

Boult. She makes our profession as it were, to stink afore the face of the gods.

Bawd. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boult. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too.

Bawd. Boult, take her away: use her at thy pleasure: crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.⁷

Boult. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.⁸

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Bawd. She conjures: away with her. 'Would, she had never come within my doors! Marry, hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of womankind? Marry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays!⁹ [Exit Bawd.]

Boult. Come, mistress; come your way with me.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee, tell me one thing first.

Boult. Come now, your one thing.¹⁰

Mar. What canst thou wish thine enemy to be?

Boult. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art, Since they do better thee in their command. Thou hold'st a place, for which the pained'st fend Of hell would not in reputation change: Thou'rt the damn'd door-keeper to every coystrel,¹¹ here to a fact recorded by Dion Cassius, and by Pliny, b. xxvi. ch. xxvi.; but more circumstantially by Petronius. Var. Edit. p. 189. A skilful workman, who had discovered the art of making glass malleable, carried a specimen of it to Tiberius, who asked him if he alone was in possession of the secret. He replied in the affirmative; on which the tyrant ordered his head to be struck off immediately, lest his invention should have proved injurious to the workers in gold, silver, and other metals. The same story, however, is told in the Gesta Romanorum, c. 44.

8 Thus also in Antony and Cleopatra:—

She made great Cæsar lay his sword to bed,
He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.

9 Anciently many dishes were served up with this garniture, during the season of Christmas. The Bawd means to call her a piece of ostentatious virtue.

10 So in King Henry IV. Part II.:—

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Go to, I stand the push of your one thing.

11 A coystrel is a low mean person.

Tyb was a common name for a strumpet.

'They wondred much at Tom, but at Tyb more;

Faith (quoth the vicker) 'tis an extant w——'

Nosce Tyb, by Richard Turner, 1607

That hither comes inquiring for his tib ;
To the choleric fisting of each rogue thy ear
Is liable ; thy very food is such
As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.¹

Boult. What would you have me ? go to the wars, would you ? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one ?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou doest. Empty
Old receptacles, common sewers, of filth ;
Serve by indenture to the common hangman ;
Any of these ways are better yet than this :
For that which thou professest, a baboon,
Could he speak, would own a name too dear.²
O that the gods would safely from this place
Deliver me ! Here, here is gold for thee.
If that thy master would gain aught by me,
Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance,
With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast ;
And I will undertake all these to teach.
I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of ?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again,
And prostitute me to the basest groom
That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will see what I can do for thee :
if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But, amongst honest women ?

Boult. 'Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent :
therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can ; come your ways. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Marina thus the brothel scapes, and chances
Into an honest house, our story says.
She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays :
Deep clerks she dumbs,³ and with her need⁴ composes

Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry ;
That even her art sisters the natural roses :
Her inkle⁵ silk, twin with the rubied cherry :
That pupils lacks she none of noble race,
Who pour their bounty on her ; and her gain
She gives the cursed bawd. Here we her place ;
And to her father turn our thoughts again,
Where we left him ; on the sea. We there him lost ;
Whence driven before the winds, he is arriv'd
Here where his daughter dwells ; and on this coast
Suppose him now at anchor. The city striv'd⁶

1 Stevens observes that Marina, who is designed as a character of juvenile innocence, appears much too knowing in the impurities of a brothel ; nor are her expressions more chastised than her ideas.

2 That is, a baboon would think his tribe dishonoured by such a profession. Iago says, ' Ere I would drown myself, &c. I would change my humanity with a baboon.' In this speech Stevens has made some trifling regulations to improve the metre.

3 The following passage from A Midsummer Night's Dream is adduced only on account of the similarity of expression, the sentiments being very different. The-seus confounds those who address him, by his superior dignity ; Marina silences the learned persons, with whom she converses, by her literary superiority.

4 Where I have come great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes ;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accents in their fears,
And in conclusion dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome.

We have the verb to dumb again in Antony and Cleopatra :—

— that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumb by him'

4 Needs..

God Neptune's annual feast to keep : from whence Lysimachus our Tyrian ship espies,
His banners sable, trimm'd with rich expense
And to him in his barge with fervour hies.
In your supposing once more put your sight ;
Of heavy Pericles think this the bark :
Where, what is done in action, more, if might,
Shall be discover'd ; please you, sit, and hark.

[Exit.]

SCENE I. *On board PERICLES' Ship, off Mity-lene. A close Pavilion on deck, with a Curtain before it ; PERICLES within it, reclined on a Couch.
A Barge lying beside the Tyrian Vessel. Enter
Two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian Vessel, the other to the Barge ; to them HELICANUS.*

Tyr. Sail. Where's the Lord Helicanus ? he can resolve you. [To the Sailor of Mitylene.]

O, here he is.—

Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene,
And in it is Lysimachus the governor,
Who craves to come aboard. What is your will ?

Hel. That he have his. Call up some gentlemen.

Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen ! my lord calls.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Doth your lordship call ?

Hel. Gentlemen,

There is some of worth would come aboard ; I pray
you,

To greet them fairly.

[The Gentlemen and the Two Sailors descend, and go on board the Barge.]

Enter, from thence, LYSIMACHUS and Lords ; the Tyrian Gentlemen, and the Two Sailors.

Tyr. Sail. Sir,
This is the man that can, in aught you would,
Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir ! the gods preserve you !

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,
And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.
Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,
Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
I made to it, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, sir, what is your place ?

Lys. I am governor of this place you lu before.

Hel. Sir,
Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king :
A man, who for this three months hath not spoken
To any one, nor taken sustenance,
But to prorogue⁸ his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperance ?

Hel. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat ;
But the main grief of all springs from the loss
Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then ?

Hel. You may, indeed, sir
But bootless is your sight ; he will not speak
To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

5 Inkle appears to have been a particular kind of silk thread or worsted used in embroidery. Rider translates inkle by filum textile.

6 Stevens thinks that we should read, ' The city's hiv'd,' i. e. the citizens are collected like bees in a hive.
We have the verb in the Merchant of Venice :—' Drones hive not with me.'

7 ' Once more put your sight under the guidance of your imagination. Suppose you see what we cannot exhibit to you ; think this stage the bark of the melancholy Pericles.'

8 ' Where all that may be displayed in action shall be exhibited ; and more should be shown, if our stage would permit.' The poet seems to be aware of the difficulty of representing the ensuing scene. Some modern editions read, ' more of might ;' which, if there was authority for it, should seem to mean ' more of greater consequence.'

9 To lengthen or prolong his grief. Prorogued is used in Romeo and Juliet for delayed :—

' My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued wanting of thy love.'

Hel. Behold him, sir: [PERICLES discovered.]
this was a goodly person,
Till the disaster, that, one mortal night,² Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir, king, all hail! the gods preserve you!
Hail,
Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.
I Lord. Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I durst wager,

Would win some words of him.³
Lys. 'Tis well bethought.

She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other choice attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,⁴
Which now are midway stopp'd:
She is all happy as the fairest of all,
And, with her fellow maids, is now upon⁵
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side.

[He whispers one of the attendant Lords.—

Exit Lord, in the Barge of LYSIMACHUS.

Hel. Sure all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit That bears recovery's name. But since your kindness,

We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you further,

That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O, sir, a courtesy,
Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every graff would send a caterpillar,
And so inflict our province.⁶—Yet once more Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir, I will recount it;—
But see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the Barge, Lord, MARINA, and a Young Lady.

Lys. O, here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!
Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. A gallant lady.

Lys. She's such, that were I well assur'd she came
Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish

I Few of the stage-directions, that have been given in this and the preceding acts, are found in the old copy.
In the original representation Pericles was probably placed in the back part of the stage, concealed by a curtain, which was here drawn open. The ancient narratives represented him as remaining in the cabin of his ship; but as in such a situation Pericles would not be visible to the audience, a different stage-direction is now given.

2 The old copies read, 'one mortal night.' The emendation is Malone's. Mortal is here used for deadly, destructive.

3 This circumstance resembles another in All's Well that Ends Well, where Lisieu gives an account of Helena's attractions to the king before she is introduced to attempt his cure.

4 The old copy reads, 'defend parts.' Malone made the alteration, which he explains thus: i. e. 'his ears, which are to be assailed by Marina's melodious voice.'
Stevens would read, 'deafen'd parts,' meaning 'the oppressed doors of hearing.'

5 Stevens prints this passage in the following manner; corrected and amended so as to run smooth no doubt, but with sufficient license:—

'She all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is with her fellow maidens now within.'

Difficulties have been raised about this passage as it stands; but surely it is as intelligible as many others in this play. 'Upon a leafy shelter,' which is the great stumbling-block, appears to mean 'Upon a spot which is sheltered.'

6 There can be but little doubt that the poet wrote:—

'And so afflict our province.'

We have no example of to afflict used by itself for to punish.

7 It appears that when Pericles was originally performed the theatres were furnished with no such apparatus as, by any stretch of imagination, could be supposed to present either a sea or a ship; and that the audience were contented to behold vessels sailing in

No better choice; and think me rarely wed.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty⁸
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:
If that thy prosperous and artificial feat⁹
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her
And the gods make her prosperous!

[MARINA sings.]¹⁰
Lys. Mark'd he your music?

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear:—

Per. Hail! ha!

Mar. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, like a comet: she speaks,
My lord, that, may be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:¹¹
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world and awkward¹² casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak.

[Aside.
Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine?—was it not thus? what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,
You would not do me violence.¹³

Per. I do think so.
I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me.—
You are like something that—What countrywoman!
Here of these shores?¹⁴

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with wo, and shall deliver weeping.

and out of port in their mind's eye only. This licence being once granted to the poet, the lord, in the instance now before us, walked off the stage, and returned again in a few minutes, leading in Marina without any sensible impropriety; and the present drama exhibited before such indulgent spectators was not more incommo-dious in the representation than any other would have been. See Malone's Historical Account of the English Stage.

8 The quarto of 1603 reads:—

'Fair on all goodness that consists in beauty,' &c.
The present circumstance puts us in mind of what passes between Helena and the King, in All's Well that Ends Well.

9 The old copy has 'artificial fate.' The emendation is by Dr. Percy.

10 This song (like most of those that were sung in the old plays) has not been preserved. It may have been formed on the lines in the Gesta Romanorum. The reader desirous of consulting the Latin hexameters, or Twine's translation of them, may consult the Variorum Shakspeare. There was not merit enough in them to warrant their production in this abridged commentary,

11 So in Othello:—

'— I fetch my birth

From men of royal siege.'

12 Awkward is adverse. So in King Henry VI. Part
II:—

'And twice by awkward wind from England's bank
Drove back again.'

13 This seems to refer to a part of the story that is made no use of in the present scene. Thus in Twine's translation:—Then Appolonius fell in rage, and forgetting all courtesie, &c. rose up suddenly and stroke the maiden, &c. Pericles however afterwards says—

'Did'st thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee), that thou cam'st
From good descending?'

14 This passage is strangely corrupt in the old copies:—
'Per I do think so, pray you turne your eyes upon

My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: ' my queen's square brows;

Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;
As silver-voic'd; her eyes as jewel-like,
And cas'd as richly: in pace another Juno;
Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hungry,
The more she gives them speech.—Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?²

Mar. Should I tell my history,
'Twould seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Prythee, speak;
Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Modest as justice, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crown'd³ truth to dwell in: I'll believe thee;
And make my senses credit thy relation.
To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st
Like one I lov'd indeed. What were thy friends?
Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee,) that thou cam'st
From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.
Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st
Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal mine,
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing indeed
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story;
If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look Like Patience, gazing on kings' graves, and smiling
Extremity out of act.⁴ What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin?

Recount, I do beseech thee; come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, sir, is Marina.
Per. O, I am mock'd,
And thou by some incensed god sent hither
To make the world laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, goo sir,
Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient;
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name Marina
Was given me by one that had some power;
My father, and a king.

Per. How! a king's daughter?
And call'd Marina?

Mar. You said you would believe me;

me, your like something that, what country women
heare of these shewes,' &c.

'Mar. Nor of any shewes,' &c.
For the ingenious emendation, shores instead of shewes, as well as the regulation of the whole passage, Malone confesses his obligation to the earl of Charlemont.

1 So Dæmones, in the Rudens of Plautus, exclaims, on beholding his long lost child:—

'O filia
Mea! cum ego hanc video, mearum me absens miseriarum communes.

Trima quæ perit mihi: jam tanta esset, si vivit, scio.
2 i. e. possess. The meaning of the compliment is:—
These endowments, however valuable in themselves, are heightened by being in your possession: they acquire additional grace from their owner. One of Timon's flatterers says,

'You mend the jewel by wearing of it.'
3 Shakspeare, when he means to represent any quality of the mind, &c. as eminently perfect, furnishes the personification with a crown. See the 37th and 144th Sonnets. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 'tis a throne, where honour may be crown'd
Sole monarch of the universal earth.'

But, not to be a troubler of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are no fairy?
No motion? Well; speak on. Where were you born?

And wherefore call'd Marina?
Mar. Call'd Marina,
For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea? thy mother?
Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychorida hath oft Deliver'd weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little!
This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep
Did mock sad fools withal: this cannot be.
My daughter's buried. [Aside.] Well:—where were you bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mar. You'll scarce believe me; 'twere best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver.⁵ Yet, give me leave:—
How came you in these parts? where were you bred?

Mar. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave
me;

Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me: and having wood'd
A villain to attempt it, who having drawn to do't,
A crew of pirates came and rescued me;
Brought me to Mitylene. But now, good sir, Whither will you have me? Why do you weep? It may be,

You think me an impostor; no, good faith;
I am the daughter to king Pericles,
If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!
Hel. Calls my gracious lord?

Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general: Tell me, if thou canst,
What this maid is, or what is like to be,
That thus hath made me weep?

Hel. I know not; but Here is the regent, sir, of Mitylene,
Speaks nobly of her.

Lys. She would never tell
Her parentage; being demanded that,
She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir;
Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me,
O'erbear the shores of my mortality,
And drown me with their sweetness. O, come
hither,

Thou that beget'st him that did thee beget;
Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus,
And found at sea again! O Helicanus,
Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as loud
As thunder threatens us; This is Marina.—
What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,

4 'By her beauty and patient meekness disarming Calamity, and preventing her from using her uplifted sword. Extremity (though not personified as here) is in like manner used for the utmost of human suffering in King Lear:—

'—another,
To amplify too much, would much more,
And top extremity.'

So in Twelfth Night:—

'She sat like Patience on a monument
Smiling at Grief.'

5 i. e. No puppet dressed up to deceive me. So in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

'O, excellent motion! O, exceeding puppet!'

6 That is, I will believe every the minutest part of what you say. So in All's Well that Ends Well:—

'To the utmost syllable of your worthiness'

And in Macbeth:—

'To the last syllable of recorded time.'

For truth can never be confirm'd enough,
Though doubts did ever sleep.¹

Mar. First, sir, I pray,
What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
My drown'd queen's name, (as in the rest thou hast
Been godlike perfect,) thou'rt the heir of kingdoms,
And another life to Pericles thy father.²

Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter, than
To say, my mother's name was Thaisa?
Thaisa was my mother, who did end,
The minute I began.³

Per. Now, blessing on thee, rise; thou art my child.

Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus, (Not dead at Tharsus, as she should have been,
By savage Cleon,) she shall tell thee all;
When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge,
She is thy very princess.—Who is this?

Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mitylene,
Who, hearing of your melancholy state,
Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you, sir.
Give me my robes; I am wild in my beholding.
O heavens bless my girl! But hark, what music?—
Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him
O'er point by point, for yet he seems to doubt,
How sure you are my daughter.—But what music?

Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. None?

The music of the spheres: list, my Marina.

Lys. It is not good to cross him; give him way.

Per. Rarest sounds!

Do ye not hear?

Lys. Music? My lord, I hear—

Per. Most heavenly music:

It nips me unto list'n'g, and thick slumber
Hangs on mine eyelids; let me rest. [He sleeps.]

Lys. A pillow for his head:

[The Curtain before the Pavilion of PERICLES is closed.]

So leave him all.—Well, my companion-friends,⁴
If this but answer to my just belief,
I'll well remember you.

[Exeunt LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and attendant Lady.]

SCENE II. The same. PERICLES on the Deck asleep; DIANA appearing to him as in a Vision.⁵

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus; hie thee thither,

And do upon mine altar sacrifice.

There, when my maiden priests are met together,
Before the people all,

Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife;
To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's, call,
And give them repetition to the life.⁶

Perform my bidding, or thou liv'st in woe:

1 i. e. in plain language, 'though nothing ever happened to awake a scruple or doubt concerning your veracity.'

2 This passage is very much corrupted in the old copies: in the last line we have, 'another like.' The emendation is founded upon that of Mason. Malone reads:—

'Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
My drown'd queen's name, (as in the rest you said Thou hast been godlike perfect,) the heir of kingdoms,
And a mother like to Pericles thy father.'
Mason's emendation is confirmed by what Pericles says in the preceding speech:—

— O come hither

Thou that begett'st him that did thee beget.'

3 So in the Winter's Tale:—

— Lady,

Dear queen, that ended when I but began,

Give me that hand of yours to kiss.'

4 Malone would give these lines to Marina, reading—

— Well, my companion-friend.

Observing that a lady had entered with her, and Marina says, I will use my utmost skill in the recovery of Pericles,

— provided

That none but I and my companion-maid

Be suffer'd to come near him.'

Do't, and be happy, by my silver bow.

Awake, and tell thy dream. [DIANA disappears.]

Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentifer,
I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, and MARINA.

Hel. Sir.

Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike
The inhospitable Cleon; but I am
For other service first: toward Ephesus
Turn our blown⁷ sails; eftsoons I'll tell thee why.—

[To HELICANUS.]

Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,
And give you gold for such provision
As our intents will need?

Lys. With all my heart, sir; and when you come ashore,

I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail.
Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems
You have been noble towards her.

Lys. Sir, lend your arm.

Per. Come, my Marina. [Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the Temple of DIANA, at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;
More a little, and then done.⁸

This, as my last boon, give me,
(For such kindness must relieve me,)

That you aptly will suppose

What pageantry, what feats, what shows,

What minstrelsy, and pretty din,

The regent made in Mitylin,

To greet the king. So he has thriv'd,

That he is promis'd to be wi'd

To fair Marina; but in no wise

Till he⁹ had done his sacrifice,

As Dian bade: whereto being bound,

The interim, pray you, all confound.¹⁰

In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd,

And wishes fall out as they're will'd.

At Ephesus, the temple see,

Our king, and all his company.

That he can hither come so soon

Is by your fancy's thankful boon.

[Exit]

SCENE III. The Temple of DIANA at Ephesus;
THAISA standing near the Altar, as High Priest
ess; a number of Virgins on each side; CERI
MON and other Inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter PERICLES, with his Train; LYSIMACHUS,

HELICANUS, MARINA, and a Lady.

Per. Hail Dian! to perform thy just command,

I here confess myself the king of Tyre;

Who, frighted from my country, did wed

The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.

At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth

A maid-child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,

Steevens contends for the text as it stands, remarking that 'Lysimachus is much in love with Marina, and supposing himself to be near the gratification of his wishes, with a generosity common to noble natures on such occasions, is desirous to make his friends and companions partakers of his happiness.'

5 This vision appears to be founded on a passage in Gower.

6 In the old copy we have here like for life again.—The passage appears to mean:—'Draw such a picture as shall prove itself to have been copied from real, not from pretended calamities; such a one as shall strike the hearers with all the lustre of conspicuous truth.'

7 i. e. regent of the silver moon. In the language of alchemy, which was well understood when this play was written, Luna or Diana means silver, as Sol does gold.

8 That is, 'our swollen sails.' So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'A vent upon her arm, and something blown.'

9 The old copy reads dum. And in the last line of this chorus doom instead of boon.

10 i. e. Pericles.

11 Confound here signifies to consume.

'He did confound the best part of an hour,

Exchanging hardiment with great Glendow'r.'

King Henry V.

Wears yet thy silver livery.¹ She at Tharsus
Was nurs'd with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
He sought to murder: but her better stars
Brought her to Mitylene: against whose shore
Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us,
Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thai. Voice and favour!—
You are—you are—O, royal Pericles!²

Per. What means the woman? she dies, help, gentlemen!

Cer. Noble sir,
If you have told Diana's altar true,
This is your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no;
I threw her overboard with these very arms.

Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.

Per. 'Tis most certain.

Cer. Look to the lady;—O, she's but o'erjoy'd!
Early, one blust'ring morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I op'd the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and plac'd her

Here in Diana's temple.³

Per. May we see them?

Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house.⁴

Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is Recover'd.

Thai. O, let me look!

If he be none of mine, my sanctity
Will to my sense bend no licentious ear,
But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,
A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!

Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead,
And drown'd.⁵

Per. Immortal Dian!

Thai. Now I know you better.

When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring.

[Shows a Ring.]
Per. This, this; no more, you gods! your present kindness

Makes my past miseries sport:⁷ You shall do well,
That on the touching of her lips I may

1 i. e. her white robe of innocence, as being yet under the protection of the goddess of chastity.

2 The similitude between this scene and the discovery in the last act of The Winter's Tale, will strike every reader.

In the fragment of the Old Metrical Romance, formerly in Dr. Farmer's possession, mentioned in the Preliminary Remarks, this is told with simplicity and pathos. I lay it before the reader as a philological curiosity:—

'The whiles he expounded thus hys lyf
Wt sorwe & stedfast thouzt,
He tolde hit to hys owene wyf,
Sche knew him [though] he hire nought,
Heo caught hym in hire armes two,

3 The same situation occurs again in the Comedy of Errors, where Ægeon loses his wife at sea, and finds her at last in a nunnery.

4 This circumstance bears some resemblance to the meeting of Leontes and Hermione in The Winter's Tale. The office of Cerimon is not unlike that of Paulina.

5 Sense is here used for sensual passion.

6 Drown'd in this instance does not signify suffocated by water, but overwhelmed in it. Thus Knolles, His-

Melt, and no more be seen.⁸ O, come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Mar. My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

[Kneels to THAISIA.]
Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina,
For she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd and mine own!

Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thai. I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre,

I left behind an ancient substitute.

Can you remember what I call'd the man?

I have nam'd him oft.

Thai. 'Twas Helicanus, then

Per. Still confirmation:

Embrace him, dear Thaisa: this is he.

Now do I long to hear how you were found;

How possibly preserv'd; and whom to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man

Through whom the gods have shown their power, that can

From first to last resolve you.

Per. Reverend sir,

The gods can have no mortal officer

More like a god than you. Will you deliver

How this dead queen relives?

Cer. I will, my lord.

Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with her;
How she came placed here within the temple;
No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Diana!

I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer

My night oblations to thee. Thaisa,

This prince, the fair-betroth'd⁹ of your daughter,

Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,

This ornament that makes me look so dismal,

Will I, my lov'd Marina, clip to form;

And what this fourteen years no razor touch'd,

To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.¹⁰

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit, Sir, that my father's dead.¹¹

tory of the Turks:—'Galleys might be drown'd in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged.'

7 So in King Lear:—

'It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows

That ever I have felt.'

8 This is a sentiment which Shakspeare never fails to introduce on occasions similar to the present. So in the 39th Psalm:—'O spare me a little, that I may recover my strength before I go hence, and be no more seen.' The same thought is expressed by Perdita, in the Winter's Tale:—

'Not like a corse;—or if—not to be buried
But quick, and in mine arms.'

9 i. e. fairly contracted, honourably affianced.

10 The author has here followed Gower, or the *Gesta
Romanorum*:—

'—this a vowe to God I make
That I shall never for hir sake,
My berde for no likynge shave,
Till it befall that I have
In convenable time of age
Besette her unto marriage.'

The poet has, however, been guilty of a slight inadvertency. If Pericles made the vow almost immediately after the birth of Marina, it was hardly necessary for him to make it again, as he has done, when he arrived at Tharsus.

11 In the fragment of the Old Metrical Romance, the father dies in his daughter's arms.

'Zitt was hys fader-in-lawe a lyve
Architrate the goud kyng,
Folk come ageynes hym so blyve
As eny myght by othyr thing;
They song daunsede & were blythe,
That ever he myghte that day ysse,
And thoughted God a thousand sythe,
The kyng was gladdest ever be ye.

Per. Heavens make a star of him! Yet there,
my queen,
We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days;
Our son and daughter shall in Tyrus reign.
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way.

[Exeunt.]Enter GOWER.

Gow. In Antioch,² and his daughter, you have heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:

Tho he saw hem alle by fore
Hys dought & hys sone in lawe,
And hys dought so fair y core,
A kynys wife heo was wel fawe,
And her chyld ther also
Al clene of kyngis blod,
He buste hem, ho was glad tho
But the olke kynge so goud.
He made hem dwelle that yer
And dryde in hys doughts arm.³

1 This notion is borrowed from the ancients, who expressed their mode of conferring divine honours and immortality on men, by placing them among the stars.

2 i. e. the king of Antioch. The old copy reads Antiochus. Steevens made the alteration, observing that in Shakspeare's other plays we have France for the king of France; Morocco for the king of Morocco, &c.

In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen
(Although assail'd with fortune fierce and keen,) ¹
Virtue preserv'd from fell destruction's blast,
Led on by heaven, and crown'd with joy at last.
In Helicanus may you well descry
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears,
The worth that learned charity aye wears.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their cursed deed, and honour'd name

Of Pericles, to rage the city turn;
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them; although not done, but meant.
So on your patience evermore attending,
New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending.

[Exit GOWER.]

THAT this tragedy has some merit, it were vain to deny; but that it is the entire composition of Shakspeare, is more than can be hastily granted. I shall not venture with Dr. Farmer, to determine that the hand of our great poet is only visible in the last act: for I think it appears in several passages dispersed over each of these divisions. I find it difficult, however, to persuade myself that he was the original fabricator of the plot, or the author of every dialogue, chorus, &c.

STEEVENS.

KING LEAR.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story of King Lear and his three daughters was originally told by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from whom Holinshed transcribed it; and in his Chronicle Shakspeare had certainly read it: but he seems to have been more indebted to the old anonymous play, entitled The True Chronicle Hystorie of Leire, King of England, and his Three Daughters Gonorill, Ragan, and Cordella, 1605. A play with that title was entered on the Stationers' books by Edward White, May 14, 1594; and there are two other entries of the same piece, May 8, 1605; and Nov. 26, 1607. From the Mirror of Magistrates, Shakspeare has taken the hint for the behaviour of the Steward, and the reply of Cordella to her father, concerning her future marriage. The Episode of Gloucester and his sons must have been borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, no trace of it being found in the other sources of the fable. The reader will also find the story of King Lear in the second book and tenth canto of Spenser's Faerie Queene, and in the fifteenth chapter of the third book of Warner's Albion's England. Camden, in his Remaines, under the head of Wise Speeches, tells a similar story to this of Lear, of Ina, King of the West Saxons; which, if the thing ever happened, probably was the real origin of the fable. The story has found its way into many ballads and other metrical pieces; one ballad will be found in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. 3d edit. The story is also to be found in the unpublished Gesta Romanorum, and in the Romançe of Perceforest. The whole of this play could not have been written till after 1603. Harnet's Declaration of Popish Impostures, to which it contains so many references, and from which the fantastic names of several spirits are borrowed, was not published till that year. It must have been produced before the Christmas of 1606; for in the entry of Lear on the Stationers' Register, on the 26th of November, 1607, it is expressly recorded to have been played, during the preceding Christmas, before his majesty at Whitehall. Malone places the date of the composition in 1605; Dr. Drake in 1604.

Of this noble tragedy, one of the first productions of the noblest of poets, it is scarcely possible to express our admiration in adequate terms. Whether considered as an effort of art, or as a picture of the passions, it is entitled to the highest praise. The two portions of which the fable consists, involving the fate of Lear and his daughters, and of Gloucester and his sons, influence each other in so many points, and are blended with such consummate skill, that whilst the imagination is delighted by diversity of circumstances, the judgment is equally gratified in viewing their mutual co-operation towards the final result; the coalescence being so intimate, as not only to preserve the necessary unity of action, but to constitute one of the greatest beauties of the piece.

Such, indeed, is the interest excited by the structure and concatenation of the story, that the attention is not once suffered to flag. By a rapid succession of incidents, by sudden and overwhelming vicissitudes, by the most awful instances of misery and destitution, by the boldest contrariety of characters, are curiosity and anxiety kept progressively increasing, and with an impetus so strong as nearly to absorb every faculty of the mind and every feeling of the heart.

Victims of frailty, of calamity, or of vice, in an age remote and barbarous, the actors in this drama are brought forward with a strength of colouring which, had the scene been placed in a more civilized era, might have been justly deemed too dark and ferocious; but is not discordant with the earliest heathen age of Britain. The effect of this style of characterisation is felt occasionally throughout the entire play; but it is particularly visible in the delineation of the vicious personages of the drama, the parts of Goneril, Regan, Edmund, and Cornwall, being loaded not only with ingratitude of the deepest dye, but with cruelty of the most savage and diabolical nature; they are the criminals, in fact, of an age where vice may be supposed to reign with lawless and gigantic power, and in which the extrusion of Gloucester's eyes might be such an event as not unfrequently occurred. Had this mode of casting his characters in the extreme been applied to the remainder of the dramatis personæ, we should have lost some of the finest lessons of humanity and wisdom that ever issued from the pen of an uninspired writer; but with the exception of a few coarsenesses, which remind us of the barbarous period to which the story is referred, and of a few incidents rather revolting to credibility, but which could not be detached from the original narrative, the virtuous agents of the play exhibit the manners and the feelings of civilization, and are of that mixed fabric which can alone display a just portraiture of the nature and composition of our species.

The characters of Cordella and Edgar, it is true, approach nearly to perfection; but the filial virtues of the former are combined with such exquisite tenderness of heart, and those of the latter with such bitter humiliation and suffering, that grief, indignation, and pity are instantly excited. Very striking representations are also given of the rough fidelity of Kent, and of the hasty credulity of Gloucester; but it is in delineating the passions, feelings, and afflictions of Lear that our poet has wrought up a picture of human misery which has never been surpassed, and which agitates the soul with the most overpowering emotions of sympathy and compassion.

'The conduct of the unhappy monarch having been founded merely on the impulses of sensibility, and not on any fixed principle or rule of action, no sooner has he discovered the baseness of those on whom he had relied, and the fatal mistake into which he had been hurried by the delusions of inordinate fondness and extravagant expectation, than he feels himself bereft of all consolation and resource. Those to whom he had given all, for whom he had stripped himself of dignity and power, and on whom he had centred every hope of comfort and repose in his old age, his inhuman daughters, having not only treated him with utter coldness and contempt, but sought to deprive him of all the respectability, and even of the very means of existence, what, in a mind so constituted as Lear's, the sport of intense and ill regulated feeling, and tortured by the reflection of having deserted the only child who loved him, what but madness could be expected as the result? It was, in fact, the necessary consequence of the reciprocal action of complicated distress and morbid sensibility; and in describing the approach of this dreadful infliction, in tracing its progress, its height, and subsidence, our poet has displayed such an intimate knowledge of the workings of the human intellect, under all its aberrations, as would afford an admirable study for the inquirer into mental physiology. He has also in this play, as in that of Hamlet, finely discriminated between real and assumed insanity. Edgar, amidst all the wild imagery which his imagination has accumulated, never touching on the true source of his misery, whilst Lear, on the contrary, finds it associated with every object and every thought, however distant or dissimilar. Not even the Orestes of Euripides, or the Clementina of Richardson, can, as pictures of disordered reason, be placed in competition with this of Lear; it may be pronounced, indeed, from its truth and completeness, beyond the reach of rivalry.*

An anonymous writer, who has instituted a comparison between the Lear of Shakspeare and the Oedipus of Sophocles, and justly given the palm to the former, closes his essay with the following sentence, to which every reader of taste and feeling will subscribe:—'There is no detached character in Shakspeare's writings which displays so vividly as this the hand and mind of a master; which exhibits so great a variety of excellence, and such amazing powers of delineation; so intimate a knowledge of the human heart, with such exact skill in tracing the progress and the effects of its more violent and more delicate passions. It is in the management of this character more, especially that he fills up that grand idea of a perfect poet, which we delight to image to ourselves, but despair of seeing realised.†

In the same work from whence this is extracted will be found an article, entitled 'Theatralia,' attributed to the pen of Mr. Charles Lamb, in which are the following striking animadversions on the liberty taken in changing the catastrophe of this tragedy in representation. 'The Lear of Shakspeare cannot be acted. The contemptible machinery with which they mimic the storm he goes out in, is not more inadequate to represent the horrors of the real elements, than any actor can be to represent Lear. The greatness of Lear is not in corporal dimension, but in intellectual: the explosions of his passions are terrible as a volcano; they are storms turning up and disclosing to the bottom that rich sea, his mind, with all its vast riches: it is his mind which is laid bare. This case of flesh and blood seems too insignificant to be thought on; even as he himself neglects it. On the stage we see nothing but corporal infirmities and weakness, the impotence of age; while we read it we see not Lear, but we are Lear—we are in his mind; we are sustained by a grandeur, which baffles the malice of his daughters and storms; in the aberrations of his reason, we discover a mighty irregular power of reasoning, unmethodised from the ordinary purposes of life, but exerting its powers, as the wind blows where it listeth, at will on the corruptions and abuses of mankind. What have looks or tones to do with that sublime identification of his age with that of the heavens themselves, when, in his reproaches to them for conniving at the injustice of his children, he reminds them that 'they themselves are old!'" What gesture shall we appropriate to this? What has voice or the eye to do with such things? But the play is beyond all art, as the tamperings with it show; it is too hard and stony; it must have love-scenes, and a happy ending. It is not enough that Cordelia is a daughter, she must shine as a lover too. Fate has put his hook in the nostrils of this Leviathan, for Garrick and his followers, the showmen of the scene, to draw it about more easily. A happy ending!—as if the living martyrdom that Lear had gone through, the flaying of his feelings alive, did not make a fair dismissal from the stage of life the only decorous thing for him. If he is to live and be happy after, if he could sustain this world's burden after, why all this pudder and preparation—why torment us with all this unnecessary sympathy? As if the childish pleasure of getting his gilt robes and sceptre again, could tempt him to act over again his misused station,—as if at his years, and with his experience, any thing was left but to die.'

ACT I.

SCENE I. A Room of State in King Lear's Palace. Enter KENT, GLOSTER, and EDMUND.
 Kent.

I THOUGHT the king had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

1 There is something of obscurity or inaccuracy in this preparatory scene. The king has already divided his kingdom, and yet when he enters, he examines his daughters to discover in what proportions he should divide it. Perhaps Kent and Gloster only were privy to

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom,† it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weigh'd, that curiosity‡ in neither can make choice of either's curiety.§

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

his design, which he still kept in his own hands, to be changed or performed as subsequent reasons should determine him.—Johnson.

2 Curiosity is scrupulous exactness, finical precision.
 3 Moiety is used by Shakspeare for part or portion.

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge : I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could : whereupon she grew round-wombed ; and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault ?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.¹

Glo. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year² elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account : though this knave came somewhat saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair ; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund ?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My lord of Kent : remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glo. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again :—The king is coming.

[Trumpets sound within.]

Enter LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

Glo. I shall, my liege.

[Exeunt GLOSTER, and EDMUND.]

Lear. Mean time we shall express our darker³ purpose.

Give me the map there.—Know, that we have divided,

In three, our kingdom : and 'tis our fast intent⁴ To shake all cares and business from our age ; Conferring⁵ them on younger strengths, while we Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany, We have this hour a constant will⁶ to publish Our daughters, several dowers, that future strife May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn, And here are to be answer'd.—Tell me, my daughters

(Since now we will divest us, both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state,)⁷

Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most ? That we our largest bounty may extend

1 Proper is comely, handsome.

2 i. e. 'about a year elder.'

3 'We shall express our darker purpose ;' that is, 'we have already made known our desire of parting the kingdom ; we will now discover what has not been told before, the reasons by which we shall regulate the partition.' This interpretation will justify or palliate the exordial dialogue.—Johnson.

4 i. e. our determined resolution. The quartos read, 'first intent.'

5 The quartos read, confirming.

6 Constant will, which is a confirmation of the reading 'fast intent,' means a firm, determined will : it is the certa voluntas of Virgil. The lines from white we to prevented now are omitted in the quartos.

7 The two lines in a parenthesis are omitted in the quartos.

8 'Beyond all assignable quantity. I love you beyond limits, and cannot say it is so much ; for how much soever I should name, it would yet be more.' Thus Rowe, in his Fair Penitent, Sc. 1 :—

'I can only

Swear you reign here, but never tell how much.'

9 i. e. enriched. So Drant in his translation of Horace's Epistles, 1567 :—

'To ritich his country, let his words lyke flowing water fall.'

10 That is, 'estimate me at her value, my love has at least equal claim to your favour. Only she comes short of me in this, that I profess myself an enemy to all other

Where merit doth most challenge it.—Goneril, Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon.

Sir, I

Do love you more than words can wield the matter Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty ; Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare ; No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour : As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found. A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable : Beyond all manner of so much I love you.⁸

Cor. What shall Cordelia do ? Love, and be silent.

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd,⁹ With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads, We make thee lady : To thine and Albany's issue Be this perpetual.—What says our second daughter, Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall ? Speak.

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister, And prize me at her worth.¹⁰ In my true heart I find, she names my very deed of love ; Only she comes too short,—that I profess Myself an enemy to all other joys, Which the most precious square of sense possesses ; And find I am alone felicitate In your dear highness' love.

Cor.

Then poor Cordelia ! [Aside. And yet not so ; since, I am sure, my love's More richer than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine, hereditary ever, Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom ; No less in space, validity,¹¹ and pleasure, Than that conferr'd¹² on Goneril.—Now, our joy, Although the last, not least ; to whose young love The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy, Strive to be interest'd¹³ : what can you say, to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters ? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing ?

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing can come of nothing : speak again.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave My heart into my mouth : I love your majesty According to my bond ; nor more, nor less.

Lear. How, how, Cordelia ? mend your speech a little,

Least it may mar your fortunes.

Cor.

Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me : I Return those duties back as are right fit, Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Why have my sisters husbands, if they say, They love you, all ? Happily, when I shall wed, That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry joys which the most precious aggregation of sense can bestow.¹ Square is here used for the whole complement, as circle is now sometimes used.

Half my love with him, half my care, and duty :¹⁴

11 Validity is several times used to signify worth, value, by Shakespeare. It does not, however, appear to have been peculiar to him in this sense. The countenance of your friend is of less value than his council, yet both of very small validity.—The Devil's Charter, 1607.

12 The folio reads conferr'd ; the quartos, confirm'd. So in a former passage we have in the quartos confirming for confering. 'To confirm on a person is certainly not English now (says Mr. Boswell) ; but it does not follow that such was the case in Shakespeare's time. The original meaning of the word to establish would easily bear such a construction.'

13 To interest and to interesse are not, perhaps, different spellings of the same verb, but two distinct words, though of the same import ; the one being derived from the Latin, the other from the French interesser. We have interest'd in Ben Jonson's Sejanus :—

'Our sacred laws and just authority

Are interest'd therein.'

Drayton also uses the word in the Preface to his Polyolbion.

14 So in the Mirror for Magistrates, 1567, Cordelia says :—

Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.

Lear. But goes this with thy heart?

Corn. Ay, good my lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Corn. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so,—Thy truth then be thy dower:

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this,¹ for ever. The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation² messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.

Kent. Good my liege, —

Lear. Peace, Kent!

Come not between the dragon and his wrath:
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight!

[To CORDELIA.]

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her!—Call France;—Who stirs?

Call Burgundy.—Cornwall, and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third:
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.—Ourself, by monthly course,

With reservation of a hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain
The name, and all the additions³ to a king;
The sway,

Revenue, execution of the rest,⁴
Beloved sons, be yours: which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. [Giving the Crown.]

Kent. Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,
Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd,
As my great patron thought on in my prayers,⁵—

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What would'st thou do, old man?

Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour's bound,

When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy doom;⁶
And, in thy best consideration, check
This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment,

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sound
Reverbs⁷ no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies,⁸ nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive.

Lear. Out of my sight!

Kent. See better, Lear, and let me still remain
The true blank⁹ of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo, —

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal! miscreant!

[Laying his Hand on his Sword.]

Alb. Corn. Dear sir, forbear.

Kent. Do;

Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift
Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee, thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!

On thine allegiance, hear me!—
Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow, (Which we durst never yet,) and, with strain'd pride,

To come betwixt our sentence and our power,
(Which nor our nature nor our place can bear;)—
Our potency made¹⁰ good, take thy reward.
Five days we do allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases¹¹ of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following,
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death. Away! By Jupiter,
This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well, king: since thou wilt appear,
Freedom¹² lives hence, and banishment is here.

The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,
[To CORDELIA]

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!—
And your large speeches may your deeds approve,
[To REGAN and GONERIL]

That good effects may spring from words of love.—
Thus Kent, O, princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit.]
Re-enter GLOSTER; with FRANCE, BURGUNDY, and Attendants.

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

Lear. My lord of Burgundy,

We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter; What, in the least;

cred and Gismund, 1592:—'You shall not be able to wage against me in the charges growing upon this action.'
George Wither, in his verses before the Polyolbion, says:—

'Good speed befall thee who hath wag'd a task
That better censures and rewards doth ask.'

9 The blank is the mark at which men shoot. 'See better,' says Kent, 'and let me be the mark to direct your sight, that you err not.'

10 'As you have with unreasonable pride come between our sentence and our power to execute it: that power shall be made good by rewarding thy contumacy with a sentence of banishment.' In Othello we have nearly the same language:—

'My spirit and my place have in them power
To make this better to thee.'

One of the quartos reads, 'make good.'

11 Thus the quartos. The folio reads, disasters. By the diseases of the world are meant, the uneasinesses, inconveniences, and slighter troubles or distresses of the world. So in King Henry VI. Part I. Act ii. Sc. 5:—

'And in that ease I'll tell thee my disease.'
The provision that Kent could make in five days might in some measure guard against such diseases of the world but could not shield him from its disasters.

12 The quartos read, 'Friendship.' And in the next line, instead of 'dear shelter,' 'protection.'

'— Nature so doth bind me, and compel
To love you as I ought, my father, well;
Yet shortly may I chance, if fortune will,
To find in heart to bear another more good will:
Thus much I said of nuptial loves that meant.'

1 i. e. from this time.

2 His children.

3 'All the titles belonging to a king.'

4 By 'the execution of the rest,' all the other functions of the kingly office are probably meant.

5 The allusion is probably to the custom of clergymen praying for their patrons in what is called the bidding prayer.

6 The folio reads, 'reserve thy state;' and has stoops instead of 'falls to folly.' The meaning of answer my life my judgment, is, Let my life be answerable for my judgment, or I will stake my life on my opinion.

7 This is perhaps a word of the poet's own, meaning the same as reverberates.

8 That is, 'I never regarded my life as my own, but merely as a thing of which I had the possession, and not the property; and which was entrusted to me as a pawn or pledge, to be employed in waging war against your enemies.' 'To wage,' says Bullokar, 'to undertake, or give security for performance of any thing.'

The expression to wage against is used in a letter from Guil. Webbe to Robt. Wilmot, prefixed to Tan-

Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?¹

Bur. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.

Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n: Sir, there she stands;
If aught within that little, seeming² substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure piec'd,
And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.
Lear. Sir,
Will you, with those infirmities she owes,³
Unfriended, new-adopted to her hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?

Bur. Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up⁴ on such conditions.
Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king,

[To FRANCE.]
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To avert your liking a more worthy way,
Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.

France. This is most strange!
That she, that even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it,⁵ or your fore-vouch'd affection
Fall into taint:⁶ which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your majesty,
(If for⁷ I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not; since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak,) that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste⁸ action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour:
But even for want of that, for which I am richer;
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou
Hadst not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke,

1 That is, 'your amorous pursuit.' A quest is a seeking or pursuit: the expedition in which a knight was engaged is often so named in the Faerie Queen.

2 Seeming here means specious. Thus in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—'Pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page.'

3 i. e. owns, is possessed of.

4 That is, 'Election is not accomplished upon such conditions,' I cannot decide to take her upon such terms.

5 'Such unnatural degree
That monsters it.'

In the phraseology of Shakespeare's age that and as were convertible words. So in Coriolanus:—
'But with such words that are but rooted in Your tongue.'

See Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2. The uncommon verb to monster, occurs again in Coriolanus, Act ii. Sc. 2:—
'To hear my nothings monster'd.'

6 Her offence must be monstrous, or the former affection which you professed for her must fall into taint; that is, become the subject of reproach. Taint is here only an abbreviation of attain.

7 i. e. 'If cause I want,' &c.

8 The quartos read, 'no unclean action,' which in fact carries the same sense.

9 i. e. with cautious and prudential considerations.—
The folio has regards. The meaning of the passage is, that his love wants something to mark its sincerity,—
'Who seeks for aught in love but love alone.'

That it intends to do?—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects,¹ that stand
Aloof from the entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing: I have sworn: I am firm.

Bur. I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father,
That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor;

Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despis'd!
Thee, and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away.

Gods, gods! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect,
My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.—

Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind:
Thou lovest here a better where¹⁰ to find. [For we Lear. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine;

Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again:—Therefore be gone,
Without our grace, our love, our benison.—
Come, noble Burgundy.

[Flourish: EXEUNT LEAR, BURGUNDY, COR-
WALL, ALBANY, GLOSTER, and Attendants.]

France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you; I know you what you are:
And, like a sister, am most loath to call
Your faults, as they are nam'd. Use well our father:
To you professed¹¹ bosoms I commit him:
But yet, alas! stood I within his grace,
I would prefer him to a better place.
So farewell to you both.

Gon. Prescribe not us our duties.

Reg. Let your study
Be, to content your lord; who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience scanted,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.¹²

Cor. Time shall unfold what plaited¹³ cunning hides;

Who cover faults,¹⁴ at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

10 Here and where have the power of nouns. 'Thou lovest this residence, to find a better residence in another place.' So in Churchyard's Farewell to the World, 1592:—

'That grows not here, takes root in other where.'

11 We have here professed for professing. It has been elsewhere observed that Shakspeare often uses one participle for another. Thus in the Merchant of Venice, Act iii. Sc. 2, we have guiled for gulling; in other places, delighted for delighting, &c. A remarkable instance of the converse occurs in Antony and Cleopatra; where we have all-obeyed for all-obeying.

12 Thus the folio. The quartos read:—

'And well are worth the worth that you have wanted.'

The meaning of the passage as it now stands in the text, is, 'You well deserve to want that dower, which you have lost by having failed in your obedience.' So in King Henry VI. Part III. Act iv. Sc. 1:—'Though I want a kingdom; i. e. though I am without a kingdom.'

13 That is, complicated, intricate, involved, cunning.

14 The quartos read:—

'Who covers faults, at last shame them derides.'

The folio has:—

'Who covers faults, at last with shame derides.'

Mason proposed to read:—

'Who covert faults, at last with shame derides.'

The word who referring to Time. In the third act,

Lear says:—

'—Caidiff, shake to pieces,

'That under covert and convenient seeming,
Hast practis'd on man's life.'

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt FRANCE and CORDELIA.]

Gon. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think, our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is; the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he always loved our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off, appears too grossly.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition,¹ but therewithal, the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. 'Pray you, let us hit together: If our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i² the heat.²

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the Earl of Gloucester's Castle. Enter EDMUND, with a Letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess;³ to thy law My services are bound; Wherefore should I Stand in the plague⁴ of custom; and permit The curiosity⁵ of nations to deprive⁶ me, For that I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base? When my dimensions are as well compact, My mind as generous, and my shape as true, As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base? Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take More composition and fierce quality, Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed, Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops, Got 'tween asleep and wake?—Well, then, Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land: Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund, As to the legitimate: Fine word,—legitimate! Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed, And my invention thrive, Edmund the base Shall top the legitimate: I grow; I prosper:—Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! And France in choler parted!

And the king gone to-night! subscrib'd⁷ his power! Confin'd to exhibition!⁸ All this done Upon the gad!⁹—Edmund! How now? what news?

¹ i.e. temper; qualities of mind confirmed by long habit. Thus in Othello:—

—A woman of so gentle a condition.

² We must strike while the iron's hot.

³ Edmund calls nature his goddess, for the same reason as we call a bastard a natural son: one who, according to the law of nature is the child of his father; but, according to those of civil society, is nulius filius.

⁴ 'Wherefore should I submit tamely to the plague (i.e. the evil), or injustice of custom?'

⁵ The nicety of civil institutions, their strictness and scrupulosity. See note 2, on the first scene.

⁶ To deprive is equivalent to dishonour. Exheredo is rendered by this word in the old dictionaries; and Holsheerd speaks of the line of Henry before deprived.

⁷ How much the following lines are in character, may be seen by that monstrous wish of Vanini, the Italian atheist, in his tract De Admirandis Naturæ, &c. printed at Paris, 1616, the very year our poet died:—"O utinam extra legitimum et connubiale thorum essum procreatus! Ita enim progenitores mei in venerem incaluisse ardentius ac cumulatim affuturique generosa se-

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the Letter.]

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading?

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No? What needed then that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'erread; for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your over-looking.

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay¹⁰ or taste of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads.] This policy, and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us, till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond¹¹ bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar.—Humph—Conspiracy!—Sleep till I waked him—you should enjoy half his revenue.—My son Edgar!—Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord, there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but, I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O, villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish!—Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please ye to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where,¹² if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his mina contulissent, e quibus ego formæ blanditiæ et elegantiam, robustas corporis vires, mentemque innumilero, consequutus fuissim. At quia conjugatorum sum soboles, his orbatum sum bonis." Had the book been published but ten or twenty years sooner, who would not have believed that Shakspeare alluded to this passage? But the divinity of his genius foretold, as it were, what such an atheist as Vanini would say when he wrote on such a subject.—Warburton.

⁷ To subscribe is to yield, to surrender.

⁸ Exhibition is an allowance, a stipend.

⁹ i.e. in haste, equivalent to upon the spur. A gad was a sharp pointed piece of steel, used as a spur to urge cattle forward; whence goaded forward. Mr Nares suggests that to gad and gadding originate from being on the spur to go about.

¹⁰ 'As an essay,' &c. means as a trial or taste of my virtue. 'To assay, or rather essay, of the French word essayer,' says Baret; and a little lower: 'To taste or assay before; præbo.'

¹¹ i.e. weak and foolish.

¹² Where for whereas;

purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence² of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

[Edm. Nor is not, sure.]

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!³—Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him,⁴ I pray you: frame the business after your own wisdom: I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.⁵

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently; convey⁶ the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects:⁷ love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked between son and father. [This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: Machinations, hollownness, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves!⁸]—Find out this villain, Edmund, it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully:—And the noble and true-hearted Kent banished! his offence, honesty!—Strange! strange! [Exit.]

Edm. This is the excellent foppery of the world,⁹ that, when we are sick in fortune (often the surfeit of our own behaviour,) we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity: fools, by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and traitors¹⁰ by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence: and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: An admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star!¹¹ My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my nativity was under ursa major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous.—Tut, I should have been that I am, had the maiden-

1 The usual address to a lord.

2 I. e. design or purpose.

3 The words between brackets are omitted in the folio.

4 'Wind me into him.' Another example of familiar expressive phraseology not unfrequent in Shakespeare.

5 'I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution,' means 'I would give all that I am possessed of to be satisfied of the truth.' So in the Four Prentices, Reed's Old Plays, vol. viii. p. 92:—

'Ah, but the resolution of thy death!

Made me to lose such thought.'

Shakespeare frequently uses resolved for satisfied. And in the third act of Massinger's Picture, Sophia says:—

'I have practised

For my certain resolution with these courtiers,' And in the last Act she says:—

'Nay, more, to take,

For the resolution of his fears, a course

That is, by holy writ, denied a Christian.'

6 To convey is to conduct, or carry through.

7 That is, though natural philosophy can give account of eclipses, yet we feel their consequences.

8 All between brackets is omitted in the quartos.

9 Warburton, in a long and ingenious note on this passage, observes, that in this play the dotages of a judicial astrology are intended to be satirized. It was a very prevailing folly in the poet's time.

10 Treachers is the reading of the folio, which is countenanced by the use of the word in many of our old dramas. Chaucer, in his Romaunt of the Rose, mentions 'the false treacher;' and Spenser many times uses the same epithet. The quartos all read treach- liest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter EDGAR.

and pat he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy:¹² My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam.—O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! fa, sol, la, mi.¹³

Edg. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you,¹⁴ the effects he writes of, succeed unhappily: [as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts,¹⁵ nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come;] when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself, wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely alay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. [I pray you, have a contentment¹⁶ forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fully bring you to hear my lord speak: Pray you, go; there's my key;—If you do stir abroad, go armed.]

Edg. Armed, brother?]

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best: go armed; I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you: I have told you what I have seen and heard, but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it: 'Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—

[Exit EDGAR.]

11 So Chaucer's Wife of Bath (v. 6196):—

'I followed ay min Inclination,
By vertue of my constellation.'

12 Perhaps this was intended to ridicule the very awkward conclusions of our old comedies, where the persons of the scene make their entry inartificially, and just when the poet wants them on the stage.

13 Shakespeare shows by the context that he was well acquainted with the property of these syllables in sol-misation, which imply a series of sounds so unnatural that ancient musicians prohibited their use. The monkish writers on music say mi contra fa, est diabolus: the interval fa mi including a tritonus or sharp fourth, consisting of three tones without the intervention of a semi-tone, expressed in the modern scale by the letters F G A B, would form a musical phrase extremely disagreeable to the ear. Edmund, speaking of eclipses as portents and prodigies, compares the dislocation of events, the times being out of joint, to the unnatural and offensive sounds fa sol la mi.—Dr. Burney.

14 The folio edition commonly differs from the first quarto, by augmentations or insertions, but in this place it varies by the omission of all between brackets. It is easy to remark that in this speech, which ought, I think, to be inserted as it now is in the text, Edmund, with the common craft of fortune-tellers, mingles the past and the future, and tells of the future only what he already foreknows by confederacy, or can attain by probable conjecture.—Johnson.

15 For cohorts some editors read courts.

16 I. e. temperate. All between brackets is omitted in the quartos.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy!—I see the business.—
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
All with me's meet, that I can fashion fit. [Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in the Duke of Albany's Palace. Enter GONERIL and Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night! he wrongs me; every hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds: I'll not endure it:
His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us
On every trifle;—When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him: say, I am sick:—
If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.

Stew. He's coming, madam; I hear him. [Horns within.]

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question:
If he dislike it, let him to my sister,
Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
[Not to be over-ruled. Idle old man,¹
That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away!—Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again; and must be us'd
With checks, as flatteries,—when they are seen abus'd.²]

Remember what I have said.

Stew. Very well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you;

What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so:
[I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak:³—I'll write straight to my sister,

To hold my very course:—Prepare for dinner. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Hall in the same. Enter KENT, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech diffuse,⁴ my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raz'd⁵ my likeness.—Now, banish'd
Kent,

If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd,
(So may it come!) thy master, whom thou lov'st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter LEAR, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner: go, get it ready. [Exit an Attendant.] How now, what art thou?

Kent. A man, sir.

1 This line and the four following are not in the folio. Theobald observes that they are fine in themselves, and much in character for Goneril.

2 I take the meaning of this passage to be, 'Old men are babes again, and must be accustomed to checks as well as flatteries, especially when the latter are seen to be abused by them.'

3 The words in brackets are found in the quartos, but omitted in the folio.

4 To diffuse here means to disguise, to render it strange, to obscure it. See Merry Wives of Windsor. We must suppose that Kent advances looking on his disguise. This circumstance very naturally leads to his speech, which otherwise would have no apparent introduction.

5 i.e. effaced.

6 To converse signifies immediately and properly to keep company, to have commerce with. His meaning is, that he chooses for his companions men of reserve and caution: men who are not tattlers nor talebearers.

7 It is not clear how Kent means to make the eating no fish a recommendatory quality, unless we suppose that it arose from the odium then cast upon the papists, who were the most strict observers of periodical fasts,

Lear. What dost thou profess? What would'st thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly, that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse⁶ with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight, when I cannot choose: and to eat no fish.⁷

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What would'st thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who would'st thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, march a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me; if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner!—Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither:

Enter Steward.

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

Stew. So please you—

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clotpole back.—Where's my fool, ho?—I think the world's asleep.—How now? where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answer'd me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertain'd with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! say'st thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your highness is wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remember'st me of mine own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity,⁸ than as a very pretence⁹ and which though enjoined to the people under the protestant government of Elizabeth, were not very palatable or strictly observed by the commonality. Marston's Dutch Courtesan says, 'I trust I am none of the wicked that eat fish a Fridays.' I cannot think with Mr. Blake-way, who says that Kent means to insinuate that he never desires to partake of fish because it was esteemed a luxury; and therefore incompatible with his situation as an humble and discreet dependant. The repeated promulgation of mandates from the court for the better observation of fish days disproves this. I have before me a Letter of Archbishop Whitgift, in 1596, strictly enjoining the clergy of his diocese to attend to the observance of the fasts and fish days among their respective parishioners, and severely animadverting upon the refractory spirit which disposed them to eat flesh out of due season contrary to law.

8 By jealous curiosity Lear appears to mean a punctilious jealousy, resulting from a scrupulous watchfulness of his own dignity. See the second note on the first scene of this play.

9 A very pretence is an absolute design. So in a former scene, 'to no other pretence of danger.'

purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't.—
But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.¹

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.—
Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, and call hither my fool.—

Re-enter Steward.

O, you sir, you sir, come you hither: Who am I, sir?

Stew. My lady's father.

Lear. My lady's father! my lord's knave; you whoreson dog! you slave! you cur!

Stew. I am none of this, my lord; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you bandy² looks with me, you rascal?
[Striking him.]

Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripped neither; you base foot-ball player.
[Tripping up his Heels.]

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away; I'll teach you differences: away, away: If you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry: but away: go to: Have you wisdom? so. [Pushes the Steward out.]

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest of thy service.

[Giving KENT Money.]

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too;—Here's my coxcomb.
[Giving KENT his Cap.]

Lear. How now, my pretty knave? how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. Why? For taking one's part that is out of favour: Nay, and thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'llt catch cold shortly.³ There, take my coxcomb: Why, this fellow has banish'd two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb.⁴—How now, nuncle? 'Would, I had two coxcombs and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living,⁵ I'd keep my coxcombs myself: There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog that must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady, the brach,⁶ may stand by the fire, and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Fool. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle:—

1 This is an endearing circumstance in the Fool's character, and creates such an interest in his favour as his wit alone might have failed to procure for him.—Stevens.

2 A metaphor from tennis. 'Come in and take this bandy with the racket of patience.'—Decker's Satiromastix. 'To bandy a ball.' Cole defines clava pilam torquere; 'To bandy at tennis,' reticulo pelleri. 'To bandy blows' is still a common idiom.

3 i. e. be turned out of doors and exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

4 The reader may see a representation of this ornament of the fool's cap in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. 'Natural ideots and fools have, and still do accustom themselves to wear in their capotes cockes feathers, or a hat with a necke and heade of a cocke on the top, and a bell thereon.'—Minshew's Dictionary, 1617.

5 A familiar contraction of mine uncle, as niggle, &c. It seems that the customary appellation of the old licensed fool to his superiors was uncle. In Beaumont and Fletcher's Pilgrim, when Alinda assumes the character of a fool, she uses the same language. She meets Alphonso, and calls him nuncle; to which he replies by calling her naut. In the same style it appears the fools called each other cousin. Mon oncle was long a

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,⁸
Ride more than thou goest,
Learn more than thou trowest,⁹
Set less than thou throwest,
Leave thy drink and thy whore,
And keep in-a-door,
And thou shalt have more
Than two tens to a score.

Lear. This is nothing, fool.

Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfe'd lawyer; you gave me nothing for't; Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

[To KENT.]

Lear. A bitter fool!

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

Lear. [No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord, that counsel'd thee

To give away thy land,

Come place him here by me,—

Or do thou for him stand:

The sweet and bitter fool?

Will presently appear;

The one in motley here,

The other found out there

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, 'faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on't: and ladies, too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be snatching.¹⁰—Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thine ass on thy back over the dirt: Thou had'st little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

*Fools had ne'er less grace in a year;*¹¹ [Singing.]

For wise men are grown foppish;

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mother; for when thou term of respect and familiar endearment in France, as well as ma tante. They have a proverb, 'Il est bien mon oncle, qui le ventre me comble.' It is remarkable, observes Mr. Vaillant, that the lower people in Shropshire call the judge of assize 'my nuncle the judge.'

6 All my estate or property.

7 It has already been shown that brack was a manerly name for a bitch. So Hotspur, in The Second Part of King Henry IV. says:—'I would rather hear Lady my brack howl in Irish.'

8 That is, 'do not lend all that thou hast.' To owe in ancient language is to possess.

9 To trow is to believe. The precept is admirable.

10 In the next line means stake.

11 The passage in brackets is omitted in the folio, perhaps for political reasons, as it seem to censure the monopolies, the gross abuses of which, and the corruption and avarice of the courtiers, who went shares with the patentee, were more legitimate than safe objects of satire.

12 'There never was a time when fools were less in favour; and the reason is, that they were never so little wanted, for wise men now supply their place.'—In Mother Bombie, a Comedy, by Lyly, 1594, we find 'I think gentlemen had never less wit in a year.' It is remarkable that the quartos read 'less wit,' instead of 'less grace,' which is the reading of the folio.

gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

*Then they for sudden joy did weep. [Singing,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among.]*

Pr'ythee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie; I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. If you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.

Fool. I marvel, what kin thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipp'd for lying; and, sometimes, I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind of thing, than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing in the middle: Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet² on? Methinks you are too much of late i' the frown.

Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou had'st no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O³ without a figure: I am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing.—Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue! so your face [To GON.] bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum,

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,
Weary of all, shall want some.

That's a shealed peascod.⁴ [Pointing to LEAR.]

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licens'd fool, But other of your insolent retinue Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir, I had thought by making this well known unto you, To have found a safe redress, but now grow fearful, By what yourself too late have spoke and done, That you protect this course, and put it on⁵ By your allowance; which if you should, the fault Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep; Which in the tender of a wholesome weal, Might in their working do you that offence, Which else were shame, that then necessity Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For you throw, nuncle,
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young.
So, out went the candle and we were left darkling.⁶

1 So in the Rape of Lucrece, by Heywood, 1608:—
'When Tarquin first in court began,
And was approved king,
Some men for sudden joy gan weep,
And I for sorrow sing.'

2 A frontlet, or forehead cloth, was worn by ladies of old to prevent wrinkles. So in George Chapman's Hero and Leander, ad finem:—

'E'en like the forehead cloth that in the night,
Or when they sorrow, ladies us'd to wear.'

Thus also in Zephieria, a collection of Sonnets, 4to. 1594:—

'But now, my sunne, it fits thou take thy set
And vayle thy face with frownes as with a frontlet.'
And in Lyly's Euphues and his England, 1580:—'The next day coming to the gallery where she was solitary walking, with her frowning cloth, as sicke lately of the sullen,' &c.

3 i. e. a cipher.

4 Now a mere husk that contains nothing. The robing of Richard II.'s effigy in Westminster Abbey is wrought with peascods open and the peas out; perhaps an allusion to his being once in full possession of sovereignty, but soon reduced to an empty title. See Camden's Remaines, 1674, p. 453, edit. 1657, p. 340.

5 Put it on, that is, promote it, push it forward. All-licence is approbation.

6 'Shakspeare's fools are certainly copied from the life. The originals whom he copied were no doubt men of quick parts; lively and sarcastic. Though they were licensed to say any thing, it was still necessary, to prevent giving offence, that every thing they said should have a playful air: we may suppose therefore that they had a custom of taking off the edge of too sharp a speech by covering it hastily with the end of an old song, or any gibb nonsense that came into their mind. I know no other way of accounting for the incoherent

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. Come, sir, I would you would make use of that good wisdom whereof I know you are fraught; and put away these dispositions, which of late transform you from what you rightly are.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse? Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Does any here know me?—Why, this is not Lear: does Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes? Either his notion weakens, or his discernings are lethargied.—Sleeping or waking?—Ha! sure 'tis not so.—Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Fool. Lear's shadow,—

Lear. [I would learn that; for by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.]

Fool. Which they will make an obedient father.]

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. Come, sir;

This admiration is much o' the favour⁹
Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright:

As you are old and reverend, you should be wise:
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn: epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. The shame itself doth speak

For instant remedy: Be then desir'd
By her that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquantity your train:
And the remainder, that shall still depend,¹⁰
To be such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils!—

Saddle my horses; call my train together.—
Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee;
Yet have I left a daughter. [rabble]

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY.

Lear. Wo, that too late repents,¹¹—O, sir, are you come?

words with which Shakspeare often finishes this fool's speeches.—Sir Joshua Reynolds. In a very old drama, entitled The Longer thou Livest the more Fools thou art, printed about 1580, we find the following stage direction:—'Entreat Moros, counterfeiting a vaine gesture and a foolish countenance, singing the foote of many songs, as fools were wont.'

7 The folio omits these words, and reads the rest of the speech, perhaps rightly, as verse.

8 This passage has been erroneously printed in all the late editions. 'Who is it can tell me who I am?' says Lear. In the folio the reply, 'Lear's shadow,' is rightly given to the Fool, but the latter part of the speech of Lear is omitted in that copy. Lear heeds not what the Fool replies to his question, but continues:—'Were I to judge from the marks of sovereignty, of knowledge, or of reason, I should be induced to think I had daughters, yet that must be a false persuasion;—it cannot be.—' The Fool seizes the pause in Lear's speech to continue his interrupted reply to Lear's question: he had before said, 'You are Lear's shadow;' he now adds, 'which they (i. e. your daughters,) will make an obedient father.' Lear heeds him not in his emotion, but addresses Goneril with 'Your name, fair gentlewoman.' It is remarkable that the continuation of Lear's speech, and the continuation of the Fool's comment, is omitted in the folio copy.

9 i. e. of the complexion. So in Julius Cæsar:—
'In favour's like the work we have in hand.'

10 i. e. continue in service. So in Measure for Measure:—

'Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending.'

11 One of the quarto copies reads, 'We that too late repents us.' The others, 'We that too late repents.' This may have been suggested by the Mirror for Magistrates:—

'They call him dotting foole, all his requests debarr'd
Demanding if with life he were not well content:
Then he too late his rigour did repent
Gainst me.'

Story of Queen Cordelia.

Is it your will? [To ALB.] Speak, sir.—Prepare my horses.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,
Than the sea-monster!¹

ALB.

'Pray, sir, be patient.

Lear. Detested kite! thou liest: [To GONERIL.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know:
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their name.—O, most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine,² wrench'd my frame of nature

From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O, Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate that let thy folly in,

[Striking his Head.

And thy dear judgment out.—Go, go, my people.

ALB. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant
Of what hath mov'd you.

Lear. It may be so, my lord.—Hear, nature, hear;
Dear goddess, hear! Suspend thy purpose, if Thou didst intend to make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!

Dry up in her the organs of increase;
And from her derogate³ body never spring
A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart⁴ disnatur'd torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks:
Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits,⁵
To laughter and contempt; that she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is!⁶
To have a thankless child!—Away! away! [Exit.

ALB. Now, gods, that we adore, whereof comes
this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter LEAR.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers at a clap!
Within a fortnight?

ALB.

What's the matter, sir?

Lear. I'll tell thee;—Life and death! I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus:

[To GONERIL.

That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs upon thee!

The untented⁷ woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes,
Beweped this cause again, I'll pluck you out;
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay.—Ha! is it come to this?

1 The sea monster is the hippopotamus, the hieroglyphical symbol of impiety and ingratitude. Sandys, in his Travels, says, 'that he killeth his sire, and ravisheth his own dam.'

2 By an engine the rack is here intended. So in The Night Walker, by Beaumont and Fletcher:—
'Their souls shot through with adders, torn on engines.'

3 Derogate here means degenerate, degraded.

4 Thwart as a noun adjective is not frequent in our language. It is to be found, however, in Promos and Cassandra, 1579:—

'Sith fortune thwart doth crosse my joys with care.'
Disnatur'd is wanting natural affection. So Daniel, in Hymen's Triumph, 1623:—'I am not so disnatur'd a man.'

5 'Pains and benefits,' in this place, signify maternal cares and good offices.

6 So in Psalm cxi. 3:—'They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; adder's poison is under their lips.' The viper was the emblem of ingratitude.

7 The untented woundings are the rankling or never healing wounds inflicted by a parental malediction. Tents are well known dressings inserted into wounds as a preparative to healing them. Shakespeare quibbles upon this surgical practice in Troilus and Cressida:—
'Patr. Who keeps the tent now?'
'Ther. The surgeon's box, or this patient's wound.'

Let it be so:—Yet have I left a daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable;
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Thou shalt find,
That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think
I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant thee.'

[Exit LEAR, KENT, and Attendants

Gon. Do you mark that, my lord?

ALB. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,

To the great love I bear you,—

Gon. 'Pray you, content.—What Oswald, ho!

You sir, more knave than fool, after your master.

[To the Fool.

Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry, and take the fool with thee.

A fox, when one has caught her,

And such a daughter,

Should sure to the slaughter,

If my cap would buy a halter;

So the fool follows after.

[Exit.

Gon.⁸ [This man hath had good counsel:—A hundred knights!

'Tis politic, and safe, to let him keep

At point,¹⁰ a hundred knights! Yes, that on every dream,

Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard his dotage with their powers,

And hold our lives in mercy.] Oswald, I say!

ALB. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon.

Safer than trust too far:

Let me still take away the harms I fear,

Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart:

What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister;

If she sustain him and his hundred knights,

When I have show'd the unfitness,—How now, Oswald?

Enter Steward.

What, have you writ that letter to my sister?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse.

Inform her full of my particular fear;

And thereto add such reasons of your own,

As may compact it more. Get you gone;

And hasten your return. [Exit Stew.] No, no, my
lord,

This milky gentleness, and course of yours,

Though I condemn it not, yet, under pardon,

You are much more attack'd¹¹ for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

ALB. How far your eyes may pierce, I cannot tell;
Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.¹²

Gon. Nay, then,—

ALB. Well, well; the event.

[Exit.

SCENE V. Court before the same. Enter LEAR,
KENT, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters:
acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know, than comes from her demand out of the letter: If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there before you.¹³

8 This speech is gleaned partly from the folios and partly from the quartos. The omissions in the one and the other are not of sufficient importance to trouble the reader with a separate notice of each.

9 All within brackets is omitted in the quartos.

10 At point probably means completely armed, and consequently ready at appointment on the slightest notice.

11 The word task is frequently used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries in the sense of tax. Goneril means to say, that he was more taxed for want of wisdom, than praised for mildness. So in The Island Princess of Beaumont and Fletcher, Quisana says to Ruy Dias:—
'You are too saucy, too impudent,
To task me with these errors.'

12 'Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?'

13 The word there in this speech shows that when the king says, 'Go you before to Gloucester,' he means the town of Gloucester, which Shakespeare chose to make the residence of the Duke of Cornwall, to increase the probability of their setting out late from thence on a visit to Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter.

Fool. If a man's brains were in his heels, were't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then, I pr'ythee, be merry; thy wit shall not go slipshod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see, thy other daughter will use thee kindly; for though she's as like this as a crab is like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell, why one's nose stands i' the middle of his face?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep his eyes on either side his nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong:—

Fool. Can'st tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in: not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!—Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight?

Fool. Yes, indeed: Thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take it again perforce!—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou should'st not have been old, before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven!

Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!—

Enter Gentleman.

How now! Are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy.

Fool. She that is maid now, and laughs at my departure,

Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.⁴ [Exeunt.]

the Earl of Gloster. Our old English earls usually resided in the counties from whence they took their titles. Lear, not finding his son-in-law and his wife at home, follows them to the earl of Gloster's castle.

1 The Fool quibbles, using the word kindly in two senses; as it means affectionately, and like the rest of her kind, or after their nature.

2 He is musing on Cordelia.

3 The subject of Lear's meditation is the resumption of that moiety of the kingdom he had bestowed on Goneril. This was what Albany apprehended, when he replied to the upbraidings of his wife:—'Well, well! the event.' What Lear himself projected when he left Goneril to go to Regan:—

'Thou shalt find

That I'll resume the shape, which thou dost think I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant thee.' And what Curan afterwards refers to, when he asks Edmund:—'Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?'

4 This idle couplet (apparently addressed to the females present at the representation of the play) most probably crept into the playhouse copy from the mouth of some buffoon actor who 'spoke more than was set down for him.' The severity with which the poet animadverted upon the mummeries and jokes of the clowns of his time (see Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2) manifests that he had suffered by their indiscretion. Indecent jokes, which the applause of the groundlings occasioned to be repeated, would at last find their way into the

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Court within the Castle of the Earl of Gloster. Enter EDMUND and CURAN, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice, that the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not: You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments?

Edm. Not I; 'Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may, then, in time. Fare you well, sir. [Exit.]

Edm. The duke be here to-night? The better!

Best!

This weaves itself perforce into my business! My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy question, Which I must act:—Briefness, and fortune, work!—Brother, a word; descend:—Brother, I say;

Enter EDGAR.

My father watches:—O, sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid; You have now the good advantage of the night:—Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall? He's coming hither; now, i' the night, i' the haste, And Regan with him; Have you nothing said Upon his party 'gainst the Duke of Albany? Advise⁵ yourself.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming,—Pardon me:—In cunning, I must draw my sword upon you:—Draw: Seem to defend yourself: Now quit you well.

Yield:—come before my father:—Light, ho, here! Fly, brother;—Torches! Torches!—So farewell!

[Exit EDGAR.]

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion [Wounds his Arm.]

Of my more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.⁶—Father! Father!

Stop, stop! No help?

Enter GLOSTER, and Servants with Torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon To stand his auspicious mistress:⁷—

Glo. But where is he?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund?

prompter's books, &c. Such liberties were indeed exercised by the authors of Lochner, &c. but such another offensive and extraneous address to the audience cannot be pointed out among all the dramas of Shakspeare.

5 Ear-kissing arguments means that they are yet in reality only whispered ones.

6 This and the following speech are omitted in the quarto B.

7 Queasy appears to mean here delicate, unsettled. So Ben Jonson, in Sejanus:—

'These times are rather queasy to be touched.—Have you not seen or read part of his book?'

Queasy is still in use to express that sickishness of stomach which the slightest disgust is apt to provoke.

8 Have you said nothing upon the party formed by him against the Duke of Albany?

9 i. e. consider, recollect yourself.

10 These drunken feats are mentioned in Marston's Dutch Courtezan:—'Have I not been drunk for your health, eat glasses, drunk wine, stabbed arms, and done all offices of protested gallantry for your sake?'

11 This was a proper circumstance to urge to Gloster, who appears to have been very superstitious with regard to this matter, if we may judge by what passes between him and his son in a foregoing scene.

Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—[Exit Serv.]
By no means,—what?

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;
But that I told him, the revenging gods
'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;
Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father:—Sir, in fine,
Seeing how loathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,
With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd mine arm:
But when he saw my best alarum'd spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to the encounter,
Or whether gasted¹ by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glo. Let him fly far:
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found—Despatch.²—The noble duke my master,

My worthy arch³ and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he, which finds him, shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous coward to the stake;
He, that conceals him, death.

Edm. When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it, with curst speech;⁴
I threaten'd to discover him: He replied,
*Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal⁵
Of any trust, virtue, or worth, in thee
Make thy words faith'd! No: what I should deny,
(As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce
My very character,⁶) I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs⁷
To make thee seek it.*

Glo. Strong and fasten'd villain;
Would he deny his letter?—I never got him.

[Trumpets within.]

Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes:—

All ports I'll bar; the villain shall not 'scape;
The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.⁸

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend? since I came hither
(Which I can call but now,) I have heard strange news.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?
Glo. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd, is crack'd!

1 That is aghast, frighted. Thus in Beaumont and Fletcher's Wit at Several Weapons:—'Either the sight of the lady has gasted him, or else he's drunk.'

2 'And found—Despatch.—The noble duke, &c.—
The sense is interrupted. He shall be caught—and found, he shall be punished. Despatch.

3 i.e. chief; a word now only used in composition, as arch-angel, arch-duke, &c. So in Heywood's If You Know Not Me, You Know Nobody:—'Foole, that arch of truth and honesty.'

4 'And found him pight to do it, with curst speech.'
Pight is pitched, fixed, settled; curst is vehemently angry, bitter.

'Therefore my heart is surely pight
Of her alone to have a sight.'

Lusty Jarentus, 1561.

'He did with a very curst taunte, checke, and rebuke the feloe.'—Erasmus's Apophthegmes, by N.
Udal, fo. 47.

5 i.e. would any opinion that men have repos'd in thy trust, virtue, &c. The old quarto reads, 'could the reposure.'

6 i.e. my hand-writing, my signature.

7 The folio reads, 'potential spirits.' And in the next line but one, 'O strange and fasten'd villain.'—

Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar?

Glo. O lady, lady, shame would have it hid!
Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights

That tend upon my father?

Glo. I know not, madam:
It is too bad, too bad.—

Edm. Yes, madam, he was.

Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the waste and spoil of his revenues.
I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,
That, if they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.—
Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like office.

Edm. 'Twas my duty, sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practice,⁹ and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glo. Ay, my good lord, he is.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more

Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,
How in my strength you please.—For you, Edmund,
Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant

So much commend itself, you shall be ours;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,

Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you.

Reg. Thus out of season; threading dark-ey'd night.

Occasions, noble Gloster, of some poize,¹⁰

Wherein we must have use of your advice:—

Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,

Of differences, which I best thought it fit

To answer from our home;¹¹ the several messengers

From hence attend despatch. Our good old friend,

Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow

Your useful counsel to our business,

Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you, madam:

Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before Gloster's Castle. Enter KENT

and Steward, severally.

Stew. Good dawning! to thee, friend: Art of the house?

Kent. Ay.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I'll mure.

Stew. 'Pr'ythee, if thou love me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury pincfold,¹² I would make thee care for me.

Strong is determined, resolute. Our ancestors often used it in an ill sense; as strong thief, strong whore,
&c.

9 i.e. capable of succeeding to my land, notwithstanding the legal bar of thy illegitimacy. 'The king next demanded of him (he being a fool) whether he were capable to inherit any land,' &c.—Life and Death of Will Somers, &c.

10 'He did bewray his practice.' That is, he did betray or reveal his treacherous devices. So in the second book of Sidney's Arcadia:—'His heart faint'd and gat a conceit, that with bewraying his practices he might obtain pardon.' The quartos read betray.

11 i.e. of some weight, or moment. The folio and quarto B. read prize.

12 That is, not at home, but at some other place.

13 The quartos read, 'good even.' Dawning is used again in Cymbeline, as a substantive, for morning. It is clear from various passages in this scene that the morning is just beginning to dawn.

14 i.e. Lipsbury pound. 'Lipsbury pincfold' may, perhaps, like Lob's pound, be a coined name; but with what allusion does not appear. It is just possible (says Mr. Nares) that it might mean the teeth, as being the Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Stew. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal, an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited,¹ hundred-pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd, action-taking knave; a whorson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, finical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that would'st be a bawd, in way of good-service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pander, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deny'st the least syllable of thy addition.²

Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee?

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou know'st me? Is it two days ago, since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee, before the king? Draw, you rogue: for, though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a sop o' the moonshine³ of you: Draw, you whorson cullionly barber-monger,⁴ draw.

[Drawing his Sword.]

Stew. Away; I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal! you come with letters against the king; and take vanity's puppet's part, against the royalty of her father: Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks:—draw, you rascal: come your ways.

Stew. Help, ho! murder! help!

Kent. Strike, you slave; stand, rogue, stand; you neat slave,⁵ strike.

[Beating him.]

Stew. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter EDMUND, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Edm. How now? What's the matter? Part.

Kent. With you Goodman boy, if you please; come, I'll flesh you; come on, young master.

Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?

pinfold within the lips. The phrase would then mean, 'If I had you in my teeth.' It remains for some more fortunate inquirer to discover what is really meant.

1 'Three-suited knave' might mean, in an age of ostentatious finery like that of Shakspeare, one who had no greater change of raiment than three suits would furnish him with. So in Ben Jonson's Silent Woman:—'Wert a pitiful fellow, and hadst nothing but three suits of apparel.' A one-trunk-inheriting slave may be a term used to describe a fellow, the whole of whose possessions were confined to one coffer, and that too inherited from his father, who was no better provided, or had nothing more to bequeath to his successor in poverty; a poor rogue hereditary, as Timon calls Apemantus. A worsted-stocking knave is another reproach of the same kind. The stockings in England in the reign of Elizabeth were remarkably expensive, and scarce any other kind than silk were worn, even by those who had not above forty shillings a year wages. This we learn from Stubbes in his Anatomic of Abuses, 1595. In an old comedy, called The Hog hath Lost its Pearl, by R. Tailor, 1614, it is said:—'Good parts are no more set by, than a good leg in a woollen stocking.' This term of reproach, as well as that of a hundred pound gentleman, occurs in The Phoenix, by Middleton. Action-taking knave is a fellow who, if you beat him, would bring an action for the assault instead of resenting it like a man of courage.

2 i. e. thy titles.

3 An equivocal is here intended, by an allusion to the old dish of eggs in moonshine, which was eggs broken and boiled in salad oil till the yolks became hard. It is equivalent to the phrases of modern times, 'I'll baste you,' or 'beat you to a mummy.'

4 Barber-monger may mean dealer with the lower tradesmen: a slur upon the Steward, as taking fees for a recommendation to the business of the family.

5 Alluding to the moralities or allegorical shows, in which Vanity, Iniquity, and other vices were personified.

6 Neat slave may mean you base cowherd, or it may mean, as Steevens suggests, you finical rascal, you assemblage of foppery and poverty. See Cotgrave, in Mirlotte, Mistoudin, Mondinet; by which Sherwood renders a neate fellow.

7 To disclaim is, for to disclaim simply, was the Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives;

He dies, that strikes again: What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.

Corn. What is your difference? speak.

Stew. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee; a tailor made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir; a stone-cutter, or a painter, could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours at the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Stew. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spar'd,

At suit of his gray beard,—

Kent. Thou whorson zed!⁸ thou unnecessary letter!—My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted⁹ villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him.—Spare my gray beard, you wagtail?

Corn. Peace, sirrah!

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger has a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword,

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain

Which are too intrinse¹⁰ t' unloose: smooth every passion!¹¹

That in the natures of their lords rebels;

Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;

Reneg,¹² affirm, and turn their halcyon¹³ beaks

With every gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.—

A plague upon your epileptic visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,

I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.¹⁴ phraseology of the poet's age. See Gifford's Ben Jonson, vol. iii. p. 264.

8 Zed is here used as a term of contempt, because it is the last letter in the English alphabet: it is said to be an unnecessary letter, because its place may be supplied by S. Baret omits it in his Alvearie, affirming it to be rather a syllable than a letter. And Mulcaster says 'Z is much harder amongst us, and seldom seen. S is become its lieutenant-general. It is lightlie (i. e. hardly) expressed in English, saven in foren enfranchisements.'

9 Unbolted is unsifted; and therefore signifies this coarse villain. Massinger, in his New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act i. Sc. 1, says:—

'I will help your memory,

And tread thee into mortar.'

Unbolted mortar is mortar made of unsifted lime; and therefore to break the lumps it is necessary to tread it by men in wooden shoes.

10 The quartos read, to intrench; the folio, v' intrinse. Perhaps intrinse, for so it should be written, was put by Shakspeare for intrinseate, which he has used in Antony and Cleopatra.

11 Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinseate

Of life at once untie.'

I suspect that the poet meant to write too intrinse; that is, too intricate, or too much intrammelled. See Florio in v. intrecciare; or intrique for intricate, as we find it in Phillips's World of Words.

11 See Pericles, Act i. Sc. 2.

12 To renege is to deny. See Antony and Cleopatra, Sc. 1, note 1.

13 The bird called the kingfisher, which when dried and hung up by a thread, is supposed to turn his bill to the point from whence the wind blows. So in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, 1633:

'But how now stands the wind?

Into what corner peers my halcyon's bill.'

A lylie byrde called the Kings Fisher, being hanged up in the ayre by the neck, his nebbe or byll will be always direct or straight against y^e winde.—Book of Notable Things.

14 In Somersetshire, near Camelot, are many large

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

Glo. How sell you out?

Say that.

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave.¹

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offence?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.²

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, or his, or hers.

Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain;
I have seen better faces in my time,
Than stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me at this instant.

Corn. This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness; and constrains the garb,
Quite from his nature.³ He cannot flatter, he!—
An honest mind and plain,—he must speak truth:
An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plain-
ness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly⁴ ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering⁵ Phœbus' front,—

Corn. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you dis-commend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer:
he that beguiled you, in a plain accent, was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it.⁶

Corn. What was the offence you gave him?

Stevo. I never gave him any:

It pleas'd the king his master, very late,
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction:
When he, conjunct, and flattering his displeasure,
Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthy'd him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd;
And, in the fleshment⁷ of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.

Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards,
But Ajax is their fool.⁸

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks, ho!
You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart,
We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice moors, where are bred great quantities of geese. It was the place where the romances say King Arthur kept his court in the west.

1 Hence Pope's expression:—

'The strong antipathy of good to bad.'

2 I. e. pleases me not.

3 Forces his outside, or his appearance, to something totally different from his natural disposition.¹

4 Silly or rather sely, is simple or rustic. Nicely
here is with scrupulous nicely, punctilious observance.

5 This expressive word is now only applied to the motion and scintillation of flame. Dr. Johnson says that it means to futter, which is certainly one of its oldest meanings, it being used in that sense by Chaucer.
But its application is more properly made to the fluctuating scintillations of flame or light. In The Cuckoo, by Nicols, 1607, we have it applied to the eye:—
'Their soft maiden voice and flickering eye.'

6 Though I should win you, displeased as you now are, to like me so well as to entreat me to be a knave.²

7 A young soldier is said to flesh his sword the first time he draws blood with it. Fleshment, therefore, is here metaphorically applied to the first act of service, which Kent, in his new capacity, had performed for his master; at the same time, in a sarcastic sense, as though he had esteemed it an heroic exploit to trip a man behind who was actually falling.

8 I. e. Ajax is a fool to them. 'These rogues and cowards talk in such a boasting strain that, if we were to credit their account of themselves, Ajax would ap-

Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks:
As I've life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.

Reg. Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night too.

Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,
You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.
[Stocks brought out.]

Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
Our sister speaks of:—Come, bring away the stocks.³

Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so:
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't: your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest and contemn'd'st wretches
For pilferings and most common trespasses,
Are punish'd with: the king must take it ill,
That he, so slightly valu'd in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrain'd.

Corn. I'll answer that.

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,
To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted,
For following her affairs.—Put in his legs.—

[Kent is put in the Stocks.]
Come, my good lord; away.

[Exit REGAN and CORNWALL.]
Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,

Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd, nor stopp'd;⁴ I'll entreat for thee.

Kent. 'Pray, do not, sir: I have watch'd, and travell'd hard;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:

Give you good morrow!

Glo. The duke's to blame in this; 'twill be ill taken. [Exit.]

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common saw!⁵

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st

To the warm sun!

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,

That by thy comfortable beams I may

Peruse this letter!—Nothing almost sees miracles,

But misery;—I know 'tis from Cordelia;

Who hath most fortunately been inform'd

Of my obscured course; and shall find time

From this enormous state,—seeking,—to give

Losses their remedies:⁶—All weary and o'erwatch'd,

pear a person of no prowess when compared to them.⁷
So in King Henry VIII. :—

—now this mask

Was cry'd incomparable, and the ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar.⁸

9 This kind of exhibition was familiar to the ancient stage. In Hick Scorne, which was printed in the reign of Henry VIII., Pity is put into the stocks, and left there until he is freed by Perseverance and Contemplacyon.
It should be remembered that formerly in great households, as lately in some colleges, there were moveable stocks for the correction of the servants.

10 A metaphor from bowling.

11 The saw, or proverb alluded to, is in Heywood's Dialogues on Proverbs, b. ii. c. v. :—

'In your running from him to me ye runne

Out of God's blessing into the warme sunne.'

i. e. from good to worse. Kent was thinking of the king being likely to receive a worse reception from Regan than that which he had already received from Goneril.

12 How much has been written about this passage, and how much it has been mistaken! Its evident meaning appears to me to be as follows:—Kent addresses the sun, for whose rising he is impatient, that he may read Cordelia's letter. 'Nothing (says he,) almost sees miracles, but misery: I know this letter which I hold in my hand is from Cordelia; who hath most fortunately been informed of my disgrace and wandering in disguise; and who seeking it, shall find time (i. e. opportunity,) out of this enormous (i. e. disordered, unnatural,) state of things, to give losses their remedies; to restore her father to his kingdom, herself to his love, and me to his favour.'

Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.
Fortune, good night; smile once more; turn thy wheel! [He sleeps.]

SCENE III. A Part of the Heath. Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;
And, by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place,
That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking. While I may scape,
I will preserve myself: and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape,
That ever penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my loins; elf all my hair in knots;¹
And with presented nakedness outface
The winds, and persecutions of the sky.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars,² who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks,³ nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Poor pelting⁴ villages, sheep-cotes and mills,
Sometime with lunatic bans,⁵ sometime with prayers,
Enforce their charity.—Poor Turlygood!⁶ poor
Tom!

That's something yet; Edgar, I nothing am.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Before Gloucester's Castle. Enter
LEAR, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange, that they should so depart from home,

And not send back my messenger.

Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before there was no purpose in their
Of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. How!

Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?

1 Hair thus knotted was supposed to be the work of elves and fairies in the night. So in Romeo and Juliet:
'—plate the manes of horses in the night,
And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.'

2 Aubrey, in his MS. Remains of Gentilisme and Judaisme, Part III. p. 234, b. (MS. Lansdowne, 236,) says:—'Before the civil wars, I remember Tom a Bedlam went about begging. They had been such as had been in Bedlam, and come to some degree of sober-ness; and when they were licensed to go out, they had on their left arme an armilla of tinne printed, of about three inches breadth, which was soldered on.'—*H.
Ellis*.

Randle Holme, in his Academy of Arms and Blazon,
b. iii. c. 3, gives the following description of a class of vagabonds feigning themselves mad:—'The Bedlam is in the same garb, with a long staff, and a cow or ox-horn by his side; but his cloathing is more fantastick and ridiculous; for being a madman, he is madly decked and dressed all over with rubins, feathers, cuttings of cloth, and what not; to make him seem a madman, or one distracted, when he is no other than a dissem-bling knave.'

In the Beil-Man of London, by Decker, 5th edit. 1640, is another account of one of these characters, under the title of Abraham Man:—'He swears he hath been in Bedlam, and will talke frankly of purpose: you see pinnes stuck in sundry places of his naked flesh, especially in his armes, which paine he gladly puts himselfe to, only to make you believe he is out of his wits. He calls himselfe by the name of Poorer Tom, and coming near any body, cries out Poor Tom is a-cold. Of these Abraham-men some be exceeding merry, and doe nothing but sing songs fashioned out of their own braines:
some will dance, others will doe nothing but either laugh or weepe: others are dogged, and so sullen both in looke and speech, that spying but a small company in a house they boldly and bluntly enter, compelling the servants through feare to give them what they demand.'
It is probable, as Stevens remarks, that to sham Abraham, a cant term still in use among sailors and the vulgar, may have this origin.

3 i. e. skewers: the eunymus, or spindle-tree, of which the best skewers are made, is called prick-wood.

4 Paltry

5 Curses.

6 Turlygood, an English corruption of turkuru, Ital.;

Kent. No, my lord.

Fool. Ha, ha; look! he wears cruel^a garters!
Horses are tied by the heads; dogs, and bears, by the neck; monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.^b

Lear. What's he, that hath so much thy place mistook

To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she,
Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

Kent. I say, yea.

Lear. No, no; they would not.

Kent. Yes, they have.

Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.¹⁰

Lear. They durst not do't;

They could not, would not do't; 'tis worse than murder,

To do, upon respect, such violent outrage:¹¹

Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserve, or they impose, this usage,
Coming from us.

Kent. My lord, when at their home

I did commend your highness' letters to them,

Ere I was risen from the place that show'd

My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post,

Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting forth

From Goneril his mistress, salutations:

Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission,¹²

Which presently they read; on whose contents,

They summon'd up their meiny,¹³ straight took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend

The leisure of their answer; gave me cold looks:

or turtureau, Fr.; both, among other things, signify ing a fool or madman. It would perhaps be difficult to decide with certainty whether those words are corruptions of turtupino and turtupin; but at least it seems probable. The Turtupins were a fanatical sect, which overran the continent in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, calling themselves Beghards or Beghins.
Their manners and appearance exhibited the strongest indications of lunacy and distraction; and their popular name, Turtupins, was probably derived from the wolf-ish howlings they made in their fits of religious raving. Genebrard thus describes them:—'Turlupin cynicorum sectam suscitantes, de nuditate pudendorum, et publico coitu.' It has not been remarked that Cotgrave interprets 'Mon Turtureau, My Pillecock, my pretty knave.'

7 See note 13, Act I. Sc. 5. p. 402, ante.

8 A quibble on crewell, i. e. worsted. So in The Two Angry Women of Abingdon:—

'—I'll warrant you, he'll have

His cruell garters cross about the knees.'

9 The old word for stockings.

10 This dialogue being taken partly from the folio and partly from the quarto, is left without any metrical division, as it was not probably all intended to be preserved.

11 'To do, upon respect, such violent outrage.' I think, means 'to do such violent outrage, deliberately, or upon consideration.' Respect is frequently used for consideration by Shakspeare.' Cordelia says, in the first scene:—

'Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.'

And in Hamlet:—

'—There's the respect

That makes calamity of so long life.'

I cannot think that respect here means a respected person, as Johnson supposed; or that it is intended for a personification, as Malone asserts.

12 i. e. 'spite of leaving me unanswered for a time.'—
Goneril's messenger delivered letters, which they read notwithstanding Lear's messenger was yet kneeling unanswered.

13 Meiny, signifying a family household, or retinue of servants, is certainly from the French meinie, or as it was anciently written, mesnie; which word is regarded by Du Cange as equivalent with mesonie or maisonie, from maison; in modern French, menage. It does not appear that the Saxons used many for a family or household.

And meeting nere the other messenger,
Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine
(Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness,)
Having more man than wit about me, drew;¹
He rais'd the house with loud and coward cries:
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.²

Fathers, that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers, that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor.—

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours³ for thy daughters, as thou can'st tell in a year.

Lear. O, how this mother⁴ swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio! down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the earl, sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not;
Stay here. [Exit.]

Gent. Made you no more offence than what you speak of?

Kent. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train?
Fool. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserved it.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant,⁵ to teach thee there's no labouring in the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking.⁶ Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.⁷

That sir, which serves and seeks for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack, when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm.

But I will tarry, the fool will stay,

And let the wise man fly:

The knave turns fool, that runs away;

The fool no knave, perdy.

1 The personal pronoun, which is found in the preceding line, is understood before the word having, or before drew. The same license is taken by Shakspeare in other places.

2 'If this be their behaviour, the king's troubles are not yet at an end.' This speech is omitted in the quartos.

3 A quibble between dolours and dollars.

4 Lear affects to pass off the swelling of his heart, ready to burst with grief and indignation, for the disease called the mother, or hysterica passio, which, in the poet's time, was not thought peculiar to women only.—It is probable that Shakspeare had this suggested to him by a passage in Harsnet's Declaration of Popish Impostures, which he may have consulted in order to furnish out his character of Tom of Bedlam with demoniacal gibberish. 'Ma. Maynie had a spice of the hysterica passio, as it seems, from his youth, he himself termes it the mother.' It seems the priests persuaded him it was from the possession of the devil. 'The disease I spake of was a spice of the mother, wherewith I had been troubled before my going into France; whether I do rightly term it the mother or no, I knowe not. A Scottish Doctor of Physic, then in Paris, called it, as I remember, virginitem capitis. It riseth of a winde in the bottome of the belly, and proceeding with a great swelling, causeth a very painful collicke in the stomack, and an extraordinary giddines in the head.'

5 'Go to the ant, thou sluggard, (says Solomon,) learn her ways, and be wise; which having no guile, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in harvest.' If, says the fool, you had been schooled by the ant, you would have known that the king's train, like that sagacious insect, prefer the summer of prosperity to the colder season of adversity, from which no profit can be derived; and desert

Kent. Where learn'd you this, fool?

Fool. Not i' the stocks, fool.

Re-enter LEAR, with GLOSTER.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary?

They have travell'd hard to-night? Mere fetches;
The images of revolt and flying off!

Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My dear lord,

You know the fiery quality of the duke;

How unremovable and fix'd he is

In his own course.

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!—

Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloster, Gloster,

I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his wife.

Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them! Dost thou understand me, man?

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands her service:

Are they inform'd of this?—My breath and blood!—

Fiery? the fiery duke?—Tell the hot duke, that—
No, but not yet!—may be, he is not well:

Infirmary doth still neglect all office,

Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves,

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind

To suffer with the body: I'll forbear;

And am fallen out with my more headier will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man. Death on my state! where—fore [Looking on KENT.]

Should he sit here? This act persuades me,

That this remotion of the duke and her

Is practice only. Give me my servant forth:

Go, tell the duke and his wife, I'd speak with them,

Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,

Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,

Till it cry—*Sleep to death.*⁸

Glo. I'd have all well betwixt you. [Exit.]

Lear. O, me, my heart, my rising heart!—but,
down.

Fool. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney⁹ did to the eels, when she put them i' the paste alive; she rapp'd 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cry'd, him whose 'mellow-hangings' have been all shaken down, and who by 'one winter's brush' has been left

'open and bare for every storm that blows.'

6 All men, but blind men, though they follow their noses, are led by their eyes; and this class of mankind, seeing the king ruined, have all deserted him: with respect to the blind, who have nothing but their noses to guide them, they also fly equally from a king whose fortunes are declining; for of the noses of blind men there is not one in twenty but can smell him who, being 'muddy'd in fortune's mood, smells somewhat strong of her displeasure.' You need not therefore be surprised at Lear's coming with so small a train.

7 'One cannot too much commend the caution which our moral poet uses on all occasions to prevent his sentiment from being perversely taken. So here, having given an ironical precept in commendation of porfity and base desertion of the unfortunate, for fear it should be understood seriously, though delivered by his buffoon or jester, he has the precaution to add this beautiful corrective, full of fine sense:—"I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it."—Warburton.

8 The meaning of this passage seems to be, 'I'll beat the drum till it cries out—Let them awake no more; let their present sleep be their last.' Somewhat similar occurs in Trullius and Cressida:—

'— the death tokens of it

Cry no recovery.'

Mason would read, 'death to sleep,' instead of 'sleep to death.'

9 Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616, under the word Cockney, says, 'It is sometimes taken for a child that is tenderly or wantonly brought up; or for one that has been brought up in some great town, and knows nothing of the country fashion. It is used also for a Londoner, or one born in or near the city, (as we say,) within the sound of Bow bell.' The etymology, (says Mr. Nares,)

Down, wantons, down : 'Twas her brother, that in pure kindness to his horse, butler'd his hay.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace !
[KENT is set at liberty.]

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are ; I know what reason

I have to think so : If thou should'st not be glad, I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulchring an adultery.—O, are you free ?

[To KENT.]
Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan, Thy sister's naught : O, Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture here,—

[Points to his heart.]
I can scarce speak to thee : thou'lt not believe, Of how deprav'd a quality——O, Regan !

Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience ; I have hope, You less know how to value her desert, Than she to scant her duty.¹

Lear. Say, how is that ?

Reg. I cannot think, my sister in the least Would fail her obligation : If, sir, perchance, She have restrain'd the riots of your followers, 'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end, As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her !

Reg. O, sir, you are old ; Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine : you should be rul'd, and led By some discretion, that discerns your state Better than you yourself : Therefore, I pray you, That to our sister you do make return ; Say, you have wrong'd her, sir.²

Lear. Ask her forgiveness ?

Do you but mark how this becomes the house :³
Dear daughter, I confess that I am old ;
Age is unnecessary :⁴ on my knees I beg, [Kneeling.
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.

Reg. Good sir, no more ; these are unsightly tricks :

Return you to my sister.

Lear. Never, Regan :
She hath abated me of half my train ;

seems most probable, which derives it from cookeny.—Le pays de cocagne, or coquaine, in old French, means a country of good cheer. Cocagna, in Italian, has the same meaning. Both might be derived from coquina. This famous country, if it could be found, is described as a region 'where the hills were made of sugar-candy, and the leaves ran down the hills, crying Come eat me.' Some lines in Camden's Remains seem to make cokeney a name for London as well as its inhabitants. This Lubberland, as Florin calls it, seems to have been proverbial for the simplicity or gullibility of its inhabitants. A cookeney and a ninny-hammer, or simpleton, were convertible terms. Thus Chaucer, in the Reve's Tale :—

'I shall be holden a daffe or a cokeney.'

It may be observed that cookeney is only a diminutive of cock ; a wanton child was so called as a less circumlocutory way of saying, my 'little cock,' or my bra-cock. Decker, in his News from Hell, 1568, says, 'Tis not our fault ; but our mothers, our cockerings mothers, who for their labour made us to be called cookenies.' In the passages cited from the Tournament of Tottenham, and Heywood, it literally means a little cock. The reader will find a curious article on the subject in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 151.

1 It is clear that the intended meaning of this passage is as Steevens observes : 'You less know how to value her desert, than she (knows) to scant her duty, i. e. to be wanting in it.' It is somewhat inaccurately expressed, Shakspeare having, as on some other occasions, perplexed himself by the word less. But all the verbiage of Malone was not necessary to lay this open.

2 'Say,' &c. This line and the following speech is omitted in the quartos.

3 I. e. the order of families, duties of relation. So Sir Thomas Smith, in his Commonwealth of England, 1601 :—'The house I call here, the man, the woman, their children, their servants, bond and free.'

Look'd black upon me : struck me with her tongue, Most serpent-like, upon the very heart :—
All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top ! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness !

Corn. Fie, fie, fie !
Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes ! Infect her beauty,
You fen-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall⁵ and blast her pride !

Reg. O, the blest gods !
So will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on.

Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse ;
Thy tender-hefted⁶ nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness ; her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort, and not burn : 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,⁷
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in : thou better know'st
The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude ;
Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose
[Trumpets within.]

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks ?

Corn. What trumpet's that ?

Enter Steward.

Reg. I know't, my sister's :⁸ this approves her letter,

That she would soon be here.—Is your lady come ?

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows !—
Out, varlet, from my sight !

Corn. What means your grace ?

Lear. Who stock'd my servant ? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didst not know of't.—Who comes here ? O, Heavens,

Enter GONERIL.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow⁹ obedience, if yourselves are old,¹⁰
Make it your cause : send down, and take my part !—

4 Unnecessary is here used in the sense of necessitous ; in want of necessities and unable to procure them. Perhaps this is also the meaning of the word in The Old Law, by Massinger :—

'—Your laws extend not to desert,
But to unnecessary years, and, my lord,
His are not such.'

5 Fall seems here to be used as an active verb, signifying to humble or pull down. 'Ye fen-suck'd fogs, drawn from the earth by the powerful action of the sun, infect her beauty, so as to fall and blast, i. e. humble and destroy her pride.'

6 Tender-hefted may mean moved, or heaving with tenderness. The quartos read tender-hefted, which may be right, and signify giving tender hefts or commands. Miranda says, in The Tempest :—

'O my father, I have broke your hest to say so.'

7 A size is a portion or allotment of food. The word and its origin are explained in Minsheu's Guide to Tongues, 1617. The term size is still used at Cambridge for one of the lowest rank of students, living on a stated allowance.

8 Thus in Othello :—

'The Moor,—I know his trumpet.'

It should seem therefore that the approach of great personages was announced by some distinguishing note or tune appropriately used by their own trumpeters.—Cornwall knows not the present sound ; but to Regan, who had often heard her sister's trumpet, the first flourish of it was as familiar as was that of the Moor to the ears of Iago.

9 To allow is to approve, in old phraseology. Thus in Psalm xl. ver. 6 :—'The Lord alloweth the righteous'

10 '—hoc oro, munus concede parenti,
Si tua maturis signentur tempora canis,
Et sis ipse parens.' Statius Theb. x. 705.

Art not asham'd to look upon this beard?—

[To GONERIL.

O, Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?

All's not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Lear. O, sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold!—How came my man i' the stocks?

Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders
Deserv'd much less advancement.¹

Lear. You! did you?
Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.²

If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me;
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd?

No, rather I adjure all roofs, and choose
To wage³ against the enmity o' the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,—
Necessity's sharp pinch!⁴—Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and, squirrel-like, pension beg
To keep base life afoot!—Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter⁵
To this detested groom. [Looking on the Steward.

Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I pr'ythee, daughter, do not make me mad;
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another:—
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine; y' thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed⁶ carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove:
Mend, when thou canst; be better at thy leisure:
I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I, and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so, sir;
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion,
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lear. Is this well spoken, now?

Reg. I dare avouch it, sir; What, fifty followers?
Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many? sith that both charge and danger Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house,

Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance

From those that she calls servants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not, my lord? If then they chanc'd to slack you,

We could control them: If you will come to me
(For now I spy a danger,) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty; to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you: my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd

With such a number; What, must I come to you
With five and twenty, Regan? said you so?

Reg. And speak it again, my lord: no more with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well favour'd,

When others are more wicked; not being the worst,
Stands in some rank of praise:—I'll go with thee;

[To GONERIL.

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,

And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord;

What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,

To follow in a house, where twice so many

Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need: our basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superfluous:

Allow not nature more than nature needs,

Man's life is cheap⁷ as beast's: thou art a lady;

If only to go warm were gorgeous,

Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,

Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true need,—

You heavens give me that patience, patience I need!

You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,

As full of grief as age; wretched in both!

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts

Against their father, fool me not so much

To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger!

O, let not women's weapons, water-drops,

Stain my man's cheeks!—No, you unnatural hags,

I will have such revenges on you both,

That all the world shall—I will do such things,—

What they are, yet I know not;⁸ but they shall be

The terrors of the earth. You think, I'll weep;

No, I'll not weep:—

I have full cause of weeping; but this heart

Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,¹⁰

Or ere I'll weep.—O, fool, I shall go mad!

[Exit LEAR, GLOSTER, KENT, and FOOL.

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

[Storm heard at a distance.

Reg. This house

Is little; the old man and his people cannot

Be well bestow'd.

Gon. 'Tis his own blame hath put Himself from rest, and must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,

But not one follower.

Gon. So am I purpos'd.

Where is my lord of Gloster?

Perhaps sumpter originally meant the paviour or basket which the sumpter-horse carried. Thus in Cupid's Revenge:—

'And thy base issue shall carry sumpters.'

We hear also of sumpter-cloths, sumpter-saddles, &c.

⁶ Embossed here means swelling, protuberant.

⁷ i. e. to be not the worst deserves some praise.

⁸ As cheap here means as little worth. See Baret's

Alvearie, 1573. C. 388.

⁹ '—magnum est quodcumque paravi.

Quid sit adhuc dubito.' Ovid. Met. lib. vi.

'—haud quid sit scio,

Sed grande quiddam est.' Seneca Thyestes.

Let such as are unwilling to allow that copiers of nature must occasionally use the same thoughts and expressions, remember that of both these authors there were early translations. Golding thus renders the passage from Ovid:—

'The thing that I do purpose on is great, whate'er it is
I know not what it may be yet.'

¹⁰ Flaws anciently signified fragments, as well as mere cracks. Among the Saxons it certainly had that meaning. The word, as Bailey observes, was 'especially applied to the breaking off shivers or thin pieces from precious stones.'

¹ By less advancement Cornwall means that Kent's disorders had entitled him to a post of even less honour than the stocks, a still worse or more disgraceful situation.

² The meaning is, since you are weak, be content to think yourself weak.

³ See p. 395, note 7, ante.

⁴ The words, 'necessity's sharp pinch!' appear to be the reflection of Lear on the wretched sort of existence
he had described in the preceding lines.

⁵ Sumpter is generally united with horse or mule, to signify one that carried provisions or other necessities; from sumptus, Lat. In the present instance horse seems to be understood, as it appears to be in the following passage from Beaumont and Fletcher's Two Noble
Gentlemen:—

'I would have had you furnish'd in such pomp
As never duke of Burgundy was furnish'd;
You should have had a sumpter, though 't had cost me
The laying out myself.'

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth :—he is return'd.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds

Do sorely ruffle;¹ for many miles about

There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men,
The injuries that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters: Shut up your doors;
He is attended with a desperate train:

And what they may incense² him to, being apt
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord: 'tis a wild night;

My Regan counsels well; come out o' the storm.
[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Heath. A Storm is heard, with Thunder and Lightning. Enter KENT, and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

Kent. I know you; Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful element:

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,³

That things might change, or cease:⁴ tears his white hair;

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,

Catch in their fury, and make nothing of:

Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn⁵

The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.
This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear⁶ would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf

Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,

And bids what will take all.⁷

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to outjest his heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;
And dare upon the warrant of my art,⁸

1 Thus the folio. The quartos read, 'Do sorely rustle,' i. e. rustle. But ruffle is most probably the true reading. See the first note on Macbeth.

2 To incense is here, as in other places, to instigate.

3 The main seems to signify here the main land, the continent. The main is again used in this sense in Hamlet:—

'Goes it against the main of Poland, sir?'

4 The first folio ends this speech at 'change, or cease,' and begins again at Kent's speech, 'But who is with him?'

5 Stevens thinks that we should read, 'out-storm.' The error of printing scorn for storm occurs in the old copies of Troilus and Cressida, and might easily happen from the similarity of the words in old MSS.

6 That is, a bear whose dugs are drawn dry by its young. Shakspeare has the same image in As You Like It:—

'A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching—'

Again, ibidem:—

'Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness.'

7 So in Antony and Cleopatra. Enobarbus says:—

'I'll strike, and cry, Take all.'

8 I. e. on the strength of that art or skill which teaches us 'to find the mind's construction in the face.' The folio reads:—

—upon the warrant of my note;

which Dr. Johnson explains, 'my observation of your character.'

9 This and seven following lines are not in the quartos. The lines in crotchets lower down, from 'But, true it is,' &c. to the end of the speech, are not in the folio.

Commend a dear thing to you. There is division, Although as yet the face of it be cover'd With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall; Who have (as who have not, that their great stars Thron'd and set high?) servants, who seem no less; Which are to France the spies and speculations Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen, Either in snuffs and packings¹⁰ of the dukes; Or the hard rein which both of them have borne Against the old kind king; or something deeper, Whereof, perchance, these are but furnishings:¹¹— [But, true it is, from France there comes a power Into this scatter'd kingdom; who already Wise in our negligence, have secret feet¹² In some of our best ports, and are at point To show their open banner.—Now to you: If on my credit you dare build so far To make your speed to Dover, you shall find Some that will thank you, making just report Of how unnatural and bemoaning sorrow The king hath cause to plain.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding; And from some knowledge and assurance, offer This office to you.]

Gent. I will talk further with you.

Kent.

No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more Than my out wall, open this purse, and take What it contains: If you shall see Cordelia (As fear not but you shall,) show her this ring And she will tell you who your fellow¹³ is That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm I will go seek the king.

Gent. Give me your hand: have you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but to effect, more than all yet: That, when we have found the king, (in which your pain

That way; I'll this;) he that first lights on him, Holla the other. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II. Another Part of the Heath. Storm continues. Enter LEAR and Fool.

Lear. Blow, wind, and crack your cheeks!¹⁴ rage! blow!

You cataracts, and hurricanoes, spout Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

You sulphurous and thought-executing¹⁵ fires, Vaunt-couriers¹⁶ to oak-cleaving thunderbolts, Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder, Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world! Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once,¹⁷ That make ingrateful man!

So that if the speech be read with omission of the former, it will stand according to the first edition; and if the former lines are read, and the latter omitted, it will then stand according to the second. The second edition is generally best, and was probably nearest to Shakspeare's last copy: but in this speech the first is preferable; for in the folio the messenger is sent, he knows not why, he knows not whither.

10 Snuffs are dislikes, and packings underhand contrivances.

11 A furnish anciently signified a sample. 'To lend the world a furnish of wit, she lays her own out to pawn.'—Green's Groatsworth of Wit.

12 I. e. secret footing. 13 Companion.

14 The poet was here thinking of the common representation of the winds in many books of his time. We find the same allusion in Troilus and Cressida.

15 Thought-executing, 'doing execution with celerity equal to thought.'

16 Avant-couriers, Fr. The phrase occurs in other writers of Shakspeare's time. It originally meant the foremost scouts of an army. In The Tempest 'Jove's lightnings' are termed more familiarly,

—the precursors

O' the dreadful thunder-claps.'

17 There is a parallel passage in the Winter's Tale:—

'Let Nature crush the sides o' the earth together,

And mar the seeds within.'

So again in Macbeth:—

—and the sum

Of nature's germens tumble all together.'

For the force of the word spill, see Genesis, xxxviii &

Foa. O, nuncie, court holy-water¹ in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o' door. Good nuncie, in, and ask thy daughter's blessing! Here's a night pities neither wise men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit fire! spout rain! Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire are my daughters; I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness, I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children, You owe me no subscription;² why, then, let fall Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave, A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man:— But yet I call you servile ministers, That have with two pernicious daughters join'd Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put his head in has a good head-piece.

*The cod-piece that will house,
Before the head has any,
The head and he shall louse;—
So beggars marry many.
The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make,
Shall of a corn cry wo,
And turn his sleep to wake.*

—For there was never yet fair woman, but she made mouths in a glass.

Enter KENT.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience, I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Fool. Marry, here's grace, and a cod-piece;³ that's a wise man, and a fool.

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love night,

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies Gallow⁴ the very wanderers of the dark, And make them keep their caves: Since I was man, Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder, Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry The affliction, nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods, That keep this dreadful pother⁵ o'er our heads, Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch, That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwhipp'd of justice: Hide thee, thou bloody hand; Thou perjur'd, and thou simular⁶ man of virtue That art incestuous: Caitiff, to pieces shake, That under covert and convenient seeming, Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close pent-up guilts, Rive your concealing continents,⁷ and cry These dreadful summoners grace.⁸ I am a man, More sinn'd against, than sinning.

Kent. Alack, bare-headed! Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel; Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest; Repose you there: while I to this hard house, (More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd; Which even but now, demanding after you, Denied me to come in,) return, and force Their scantied courtesy.

Lear. My wits begin to turn.— Come on, my boy: How dost, my boy? Art cold? I am cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow? The art of our necessities is strange, That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel,

Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart That's sorry yet for thee.⁹

Fool. He that has a little tiny wit—

*With a heigh, ho, the wind and the rain,—
Must make content with his fortunes fit;¹⁰*

For the rain it raineth every day.¹¹

Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt LEAR and KENT]

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtezan.¹²

—I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:
When priests are more in word than matter;
When brewers mar their malt with water;
When nobles are their tailor's tutors;
No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors;
When every case in law is right;
No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;
When slanderers do not live in tongues;
Nor cutpurses come not to throngs;
When usurers tell their gold i' the field;
And bawds and whores do churches build:—
Then shall the realm of Albion
Come to great confusion.¹³
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in Gloster's Castle. Enter GLOSTER and EDMUND.

Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing: When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing: There is division between the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night;—'tis dangerous to be spoken:—I have locked the letter in my closet: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged at home; there is part of a power already footed:¹⁴ we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him: go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: If he ask for me, I am ill and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund: pray you, be careful. [Exit.]

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke Instantly know; and of that letter too:—

¹ Court holy-water is fair words and flattering speeches. Gonfiare alcuno, (says Florio,) to sooth or flatter one, to set one agogge, or with fair words bring him into a fool's paradise; to fill one with hopes, or court holie-water. It appears to have been borrowed from the French, who have their Eau benite de la cour in the same sense.

² I. e. submission, obedience.

³ Meaning the king and himself. The king's grace was the usual expression in Shakespeare's time: perhaps the latter phrase alludes to the saying of a contemporary wit, that there is no discretion below the girdle.

⁴ To gallow, is to frighten, to scare.

⁵ Thus the folio and one of the quartos; the other quarto reads thund'ring.

⁶ I. e. counterfeit; from simulo, Lat.

—My practices so prevail'd,
That I return'd with simular proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad.⁷

Cyn. heline, Act v. Sc. 5.

⁷ Continent for that which contains or encloses. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'Heart, once be stronger than thy continent.'

The quartos read, — concealed centers.

⁸ Summoners are officers that summon offenders before a proper tribunal. See Chaucer's Sompnour's Tale, v. 625—670. Thus in Howard's Defensive against the Poison of supposed Prophecies, 1581:—
'They seem to brag most of the strange events which follow for the most part after blazing stars, as if they were the summoners of God, to call princes to the seat of judgment.'

⁹ The quartos read, 'That sorrows yet for thee.'

¹⁰ Part of the Clown's song at the end of Twelfth Night.

¹¹ This speech is not in the quartos.

¹² These lines are taken from what is commonly called Chaucer's Prophecy; but which is much older than his time in its original form. It is thus quoted by Puttenham, in his Art of Poetry, 1589:—

'When faith fails in priestes saws,
And lords heeds are holden for laws
And robbery is tane for purchase,
And litchery for solace,
Then shall the realm of Albion
Be brought to great confusion.'

See the Works of Chaucer, in Whittingham's edit. vol. v. p. 178.

¹³ The quartos read, larded.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me :—
That which my father loses ; no less than all :
The younger rises, when the old doth fall. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Part of the Heath, with a Hovel.
Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord ; good my lord,
enter :

The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. [Storm still.]

Lear. Let me alone.
Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart ?

Kent. I'd rather break mine own : Good my lord,
enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin : so 'tis to thee ;
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt.¹ Thou'dst shun a bear :
But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea, Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free,

The body's delicate : the tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there.—Fili'ial ingratitude !
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand,
For lifting food to't ?—But I will punish home :—
No, I will weep no more.—In such a night
To shut me out !—Pour on ; I will endure :²
In such a night as this ! O, Regan, Goneril !—
Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave you all—
O, that way madness lies ; let me shun that ;
No more of that,—

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. 'Pr'ythee, go in thyself ; seek thine own ease ;

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt nie more.—But I'll go in :
In, boy : go first.—[To the Fool.] You houseless⁴ poverty,—

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.—
[Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness,⁵ defend you
From seasons such as these ? O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this ; Take physic, pomp ;

¹ Stevens thought that Lear does not address this question to Kent, but to his own bosom ; and would point the passage thus :—

'——— Wilt break, my heart ?'

'Taking the words of Lear by themselves (says Mr. Pye), the sense and punctuation proposed by Stevens is very judicious ; but is confuted by what Kent answers, who must know how Lear spoke it ; and there seems no sort of reason why, as is suggested, he should affect to misunderstand him. Nothing is more natural than for a person absorbed in the contemplation of his own misery, to answer offers of assistance that interrupt him, with petulance.'

² That of two concomitant pains, the greater obscures to relieve the less, is an aphorism of Hippocrates. See Disquisitions Metaphysical and Literary, by F. Sayers, M.D. 1793, p. 68.

³ He lesser pangs can bear who hath endured the chief.
Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

⁴ This line is omitted in the quartos.

⁵ And the next line are only in the folio. They are very judiciously intended to represent that humility, or tenderness, or neglect of forms which affliction forces on the mind.

⁶ Loop'd and window'd is full of holes and apertures : the allusion is to loop-holes, such as are found in ancient castles, and designed for the admission of light, where windows would have been inconvenient.

⁷ A kindred thought occurs in Pericles :—
'O, let those cities that of Plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots,—hear these tears ;
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.'

⁸ This speech of Edgar's is omitted in the quartos.—
He gives the sign used by those who are sounding the depth at sea.

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel ;
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just.⁸

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half ! Poor Tom !

[The Fool runs out from the Hovel.]

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit.
Help me, help me !

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who's there ?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit ; he says his name's poor
Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i' the straw ?

Come forth.

Enter EDGAR, disguised as a Madman.

Edg. Away ! the foul fiend follows me :—
Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.—
Humph ! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.⁹

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters ?
And art thou come to this ?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom ? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, over bog and quagmire,¹⁰ that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew ; set ratsbane by his porridge ; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay troting-horse over four-inched bridges, to court his own shadow for a traitor :—Bless thy five wits !¹¹
Tom's a-cold.—O, do de, do de, do de.—Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking !¹² Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes :
There could I have him now,—and there,—and there, and there again, and there. [Storm continues.]

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass ?—

Could'st thou save nothing ? Did'st thou give them all ?

Fool. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all ashamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air

Hang fated o'er men's faults,¹³ light on thy daughters !

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor ! nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters.—

Is it the fashion that discarded fathers

Should have thus little mercy on their flesh ?

Judicious punishment ! 'twas this flesh begot

Those pelican daughters.¹⁴

⁸ So in the Induction to the Taming of the Shrew, Sly says, 'Go to thy cold bed and warm thee ;' which is supposed to be in ridicule of The Spanish Tragedy, or some play equally absurd. The word cold is omitted in the folio.

⁹ Alluding to the ignis fatuus, supposed to be lights kindled by mischievous beings to lead travellers into destruction. He afterwards recounts the temptations by which he was prompted to suicide ; the opportunities of destroying himself, which often occurred to him in his melancholy moods. Infernal spirits are always represented as urging the wretched to self-destruction. So in Dr. Faustus, 1604 :—

'Swords, poisons, halters, and evenom'd steel,

Are laid before me to despatch myself.'

Shakspeare found this charge against the fiend in Harner's Declaration, 1603, before cited.

¹⁰ It has been before observed, that the wits seem to have been reckoned fire by analogy to the five senses. They were sometimes confounded by old writers, as in the instance cited by Percy and Stevens ; Shakspeare, however, in his 141st Sonnet, considers them as distinct.

¹¹ But my five wits nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee.'

¹² To take is to blast, or strike with malignant influence. See a former passage :—

'—— strike her young bones,
Ye taking airs, with lameness.'

¹³ So in Timon of Athens :—

'Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high view'd city hang his poison
In the sick air.'

¹⁴ The young pelican is fabled to suck the mother's blood. The allusions to this fable are very numerous in old writers.

Edg. Pillicock¹ sat on pillicock's-hill;—
Holloo, halloo, loo, loo!

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed of the foul fiend: Obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet-heart on proud array; Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my hair;² wore gloves in my cap;³ served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it: Wine loved I deeply; dice dearly; and in woman, out-paramoured the Turk: False of heart, light of ear,⁴ bloody of hand; Hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books,⁵ and defy the foul fiend.—Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says soom, mun, ha no nonny, dorphin my boy, my boy, sessa: let him trot by.⁶

[Storm still continua.

Lear. Why, thou were better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.—Is man no more than this? Consider him well: Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume:—Ha! here's three of us are sophisticated!—Thou

¹ It should be observed that Killico is one of the devils mentioned in Harsnet's book. The inquisitive reader may find a further explanation of this word in a note to the translation of Rabelais, edit. 1750, vol. i. p. 194. In Minsheu's Dictionary, art. 9299; and Chalmers's Works of Sir David Lindsay, Glossary, v. pillok.

² Then Ma. Mainy, by the instigation of the first of the seven, [spirits,] began to set his hands unto his side, curled his hair, and used such gestures as Ma. Edmunds [the exorcist] presently affirmed that that spirit was Pride. Herewith he began to curse and banne, saying, What a poxe do I here? I will stay no longer among a company of rascal priests, but go to the court, and brave it amongst my fellows, the noblemen there assembled. 'Shortly after they [the seven spirits] were all cast forth, and in such manner as Ma. Edmunds directed them, which was, that every devil should depart in some certaine forme, representing either a beast or some other creature that had the resemblance of that sinne whereof he was the chief author: whereupon the spirit of Pride departed in the forme of a peacock; the spirit of Sloth in the likeness of an asse; the spirit of Envie in the similitude of a dog; the spirit of Gluttony in the form of a calfe; and the other devils had also in their departure their particular likenesses agreeable to their natures.—Harsnet's Declaration, &c. 1603. Before each sin was cast out, Mainy, by gestures acted that particular sin—curling his hair, to show pride, &c. &c.

³ It was anciently the custom to wear gloves in the hat on three distinct occasions, viz. as the favour of a mistress, the memorial of a friend, and as a mark to be challenged by an enemy. Prince Henry boasts that he will pluck a glove from the commonest creature and wear it in his helmet. And Tucca says to Sir Quintilian, in Decker's Satiromastix:—'Thou shalt wear her glove in thy worshipful hat, like to a leather brooch.' And Pandora in Lily's Woman in the Moon, 1597:—

'—he that first presents me with his head

Shall wear my glove in favour of the dead.'

Portia, in her assumed character, asks Bassanio for his gloves, which she says she will wear for his sake; and King Henry V. gives the pretended glove of Alençon to Fluellen, which afterwards occasions his quarrel with the English soldier.

⁴ Credulous of evil, ready to receive malicious reports.

⁵ When spendthrifts, &c. resorted to usurers or tradesmen for the purpose of raising money by means of shop goods, or brown paper commodities, they usually entered their promissory notes, or other similar obligations, in books kept for that purpose. In Lodge's Looking Glasse for England, 1598, &c. a usurer says to a gentleman, 'I have thy hand set to my book, that thou receivedst forty pounds of me in monie.' To which art the thing itself:—unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art.—Off, off, you leudings:—Come; unbutton here.'

[Tearing off his Clothes.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, nuncle, be contented; this is a naughty night to swim in.—Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest of his body cold.—Look, here comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet:⁹ he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin,¹⁰ squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold;¹¹

He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold;

Bid her alight,

And her troth plight,

*And, Avoint thee, witch, avoint thee!*¹²

Kent. How fares your grace?

Enter GLOSTER, with a Torch.

Lear. What's he?

Kent. Who's there? What is't you seek?

Glo. What are you there? Your names?

Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water; that in the fury of the heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallets; swallows the old the other answers, 'It was your device to colour the statue, but your conscience knows what I had.'

'If I but write my name in mercers' books,

I am as sure to have at six months end

A rascal at my elbow with his mace,' &c.

All Fools, by Chapman, 1605.

⁶ 'Dolphin my boy, my boy,

Cease, let him trot by;

It seemeth not that such a foe

From me or you would fly.'

This is a stanza from a very old ballad, written on some battle fought in France; during which the king, unwilling to put the suspected valour of his son the Dauphin to the trial, therefore, as different champions cross the field, the king always discovers some objection to his attacking each of them, and repeats the two first lines as every fresh personage is introduced; and at last assisist in propping up a dead body against a tree for him to try his manhood upon. Steevens had this account from an old gentleman, who was only able to report part of the ballad. In Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, Cokes cries out, 'God's my life! He shall be Dauphin, my boy?' 'Hey nonny, nonny' is merely the burthen of another ballad.

⁷ The words unbutton here, are only in the folio.

The quartos read, Come on, be true.

⁸ Naughty signifies bad, unfit, improper. This epithet, which, as it stands here, excites a smile, in the age of Shakspeare was employed on serious occasions. The merriment of the Fool depended on his general image, and not on the quaintness of its auxiliary.

⁹ The name of this fiend, though so grotesque, was not invented by Shakspeare, but by those who wished to impose upon their hearers the belief of his actual existence: this, and most of the fiends mentioned by Edgar, being to be found in Bishop Harsnet's book, among those which the Jesuits, about the time of the Spanish invasion, pretended to cast out, for the purpose of making converts. The principal scene of this farce was laid in the family of Mr. Edmund Peckham, a Catholic. Harsnet published his account of the detection of the imposture, by order of the privy council. 'Frateretto, Flibberdibet, Hoberdidade, Troobatto, were four devils of the round or morrice.—These four had forty assistants under them, as themselves doe confesse. Flebergibbe is used by Latimer for a scyphant. And Cotgrave explains Coquette by a Flebergibet or Thiffl.'

It was an old tradition that spirits were relieved from the confinement in which they were held during the day, at the time of curfew, that is, at the close of the day, and were permitted to wander at large till the first cock-crowing. Hence, in The Tempest, they are said to 'rejoice to hear the solemn curfew.'

¹¹ About St. Withold we have no certainty. This adventure is not found in the common legends of St. Vitallis, whom Mr. Tyrwhitt thought was meant.

¹² See Macbeth.

Have been Tom's food for seven long year.*¹

Beware my follower : Peace, Smolkin ;² peace, thou fiend !

Glo. What, hath your grace no better company ?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman ;
Modo he's call'd, and Mahu.³

Glo. Our flesh, and blood, my lord, is grown so vile,
That it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.

Glo. Go in with me ; my duty cannot suffer

To obey in all your daughters' hard commands :

Though their injunction be to bar my doors,

And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you,

Yet have I ventur'd to come to seek you out,

And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher :—

What is the cause of thunder ?

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer ;

Go into the house.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned

Theban :

What is your study ?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord,

His wits begin to unsettle.³

Glo. Canst thou blame him ?

His daughters seek his death :—Ah, that good

Kent :—

He said it would be thus :—Poor banish'd man !—

Thou say'st, the king grows mad ; I'll tell thee,

friend,

I am almost mad myself ; I had a son,

Now outlaw'd from my blood ; he sought my life,

But lately, very late ; I lov'd him, friend,—

No father his son dearer : true to tell thee,

[Storm continues.]

The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night's this !

I do beseech your grace,—

Lear. O, cry you mercy,

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there, to the hovel ; keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

of mee.'

In the Goblins, by Sir John Suckling, a catch is introduced, which concludes with these two lines :—

'The prince of darkness is a gentleman ;

Mahu, Mahu is his name.'

This catch may not be the production of Suckling, but the original referred to by Edgar's speech.

3 Lord Orford has the following remark in the postscript to his Mysterious Mother, which deserves a place

here :—' When Belvidera talks of lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber, she is not mad, but light-headed. When madness has taken possession of a person, such character ceases to be fit for the stage, or at least should appear there but for a short time ; it being the business of the theatre to exhibit passions, not distempers. The finest picture ever drawn of a head discomposed by misfortune is that of King Lear. His

Lear. With him ;

I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, sooth him ; let him take the fellow.

Glo. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on ; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words :

Hush.

Edg. Child Rowland⁴ to the dark tower came,

His word was still,—Fie, foh, and fum,

I smell the blood of a British man.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Gloster's Castle. Enter

CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart this house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death ;

but a provoking merit,⁵ set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just ! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O, heavens ! that this treason were not, or not I the detector !

Corn. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True, or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the king,

it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee ; and thou shalt find a dearer father in thy love. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle. Enter GLOSTER, LEAR,

KENT, FOOL, and EDGAR.

Glo. Here is better than the open air ; take it thankfully : I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can : I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience :—The gods reward your kindness ! [Exit GLOSTER.]

Edg. Frateretto⁶ calls me ; and tells me Nero is thoughts dwell on the ingratitude of his daughters, and every sentence that falls from his wildness excites reflexion and pity. Had freuzy entirely seized him, our compassion would abate ; we should conclude that he no longer felt unhappiness. Shakspeare wrote as a philosopher, Otway as a poet.'

4 Capel observes that Child Rowland means the Knight Orlando. He would read come, with the quar-

tos absolutely (Orlando being come to the dark tower) ;

and supposes a line to be lost 'which spoke of some giant, the inhabitant of that tower, and the smellier-out of Child Rowland, who comes to encounter him.' He proposes to fill up the passage thus :—

'Child Rowland to the dark tower come,

[The giant roar'd, and out he ran ;]

His word was still, &c.

Part of this is to be found in the second part of Jack and the Giants, which, if not as old as the time of Shakspeare, may have been compiled from something that was so : they are uttered by a giant :—

'Fie, favo, fum,

I smell the blood of an Englishman,

Be he alive, or be he dead,

I'll grind his bones to make my bread.'

5 Cornwall seems to mean the merit of Edmund, which, being noticed by Gloster, provoked or instigated

Edgar to seek his father's death.

6 See the quotation from Harsnet, in note 2 on the preceding scene. Rabelais says that Nero was a fiddler in hell, and Trajan an angler. The history of Gara-gantia had appeared in English before 1575, being mentioned in Laneham's Letter from Killingworth, printed in that year.

an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent,¹ and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, nuncle, tell me, whether a mad-man be a gentleman, or a yeoman?

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No; he's a yeoman, that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman, that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hissing² in upon them:—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.³

Fool. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's heels,⁴ a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them straight: Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer:⁵—

[To EDGAR.]

Thou, sapient sir, sit here. [To the Fool.]—Now, you she foxes!—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares!—

Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?⁶

Come o'er the bourn,⁷ Bessy to me:—

Fool. Her boat hath a leak.

And she must not speak

Why she dares not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly⁸ for two white herrings. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amazed: Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

Lear. I'll see their trial first:—Bring in the evidence—

Thou robbed man of justice, take thy place;

[To EDGAR.]

And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity, [To the Fool.] Bench by his side:—You are of the commission, Sit you too. [To KENT.]

1 Perhaps he is here addressing the Fool. Fools were anciently termed innocents. So in Alla Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 3:—'The sheriff's fool—a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay.'

2 The old copies have hissing, which Malone changed to whizzing. One of the quartos spells the word hissing, which indicates that the reading of the present text is right.

3 This and the next thirteen speeches are only in the quartos.

4 The old copies read, 'a horse's health;' but heels was certainly meant. 'Trust not a horse's heels, nor a dog's tooth,' is a proverb in Ray's Collection; which may be traced at least as far back as the time of our Edward II. 'Et ideo Babilo in comedilis insinuat dicens:—In fide, dente, pede, molieris, equi canis est fraus.—Hoc sic vulgariter est dici:—

'Till horsi's fute thou never traist,

Till hondis toth, ne woman's faith.'

Forduin Scotichronicon, l. xlv. c. 32.

The proverb in the text is probably from the Italian.

5 Justicer from Justiciarius, was the old term, as we learn from Lambard's Eirenarcha:—'And of this it commeth that M. Fitzherbert, (in his Treatise of the Justices of Peace,) calleth them justicers (contractly for justiciars), and not justices, as we commonly and not altogether improperly doe name them.'

6 When Edgar says, 'Look, where he stands and glares!' he seems to be speaking in the character of a madman, who thinks he sees the fiend. 'Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?' is a question addressed to some visionary spectator, and may mean no more than 'Do you want eyes when you should use them most? that you cannot see this spectre.'

7 A bourn is a brook or rivulet. At the beginning of A Very Merry and Pythie Comedie, called The Longer Thou Livest The More Fool Thou Art. &c. blk. let. no date:—'Entreth Mozes, counterfeiting a vain gesture and foolish countenance, synging the foote of many songs, as fooles were wont;' and among them is this passage:—

'Com over the loorne Bessé,

My litle pretie Bessé,

Come over the boorne, Bessé, to me.'

The old copies read, 'o'er the broome;' and Johnson suggested, as there was no connexion between a boat and a broom, that it was an error. Stevens made the correction, and adduced this illustration. There is peculiar propriety in this address: Bessy and poor Tom usually travelled together, as appears by a passage cited

Edg. Let us deal justly.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin's mouth,

Thy sheep shall take no harm.

Pur! the cat is gray.

Lear. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress; Is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a jointstool.¹⁰

Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim

What store her heart is made of.—Stop her there! Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place! False justicer, why hast thou let her 'scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits!

Kent. O, pity!—Sir, where is the patience now, That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much, They'll mar my counterfeiting. [Aside.]

Lear. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them:—Avant, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,

Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lym;¹¹

Or bobtail tike,¹² or trundle-tail;

Tom will make them weep and wail:

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled.

Do de, de de. Sessa.¹³ Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns:—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.¹⁴ from Dick Whipper's Sessions, 1607, by Malone. Mad women, (who travel about the country, are called in Shropshire Cousin Betties, and elsewhere Mad Bessies.

8 Much of this may have been suggested by Harnett's book. Sarah Williams deposes, 'That if at any time, she did belch, as often times she did by reason that shee was troubled with a wind in her stomack, the priests would say at such times, that then the spirit began to rise in her...and that the wind was the devil.' And, (as she saith,) if they heard any croaking in her belly... then they would make a wonderful matter of that. 'One Hoberdidence is mentioned in a former note. 'One time shee remembereth that, shee having the said croaking in her belly, they said it was the devil that was about the bed, that spake with the voice of a toad,' p. 194, 195, &c.

9 Minikin was anciently a term of endearment.—Baret, in his Alvearie, interprets feat by 'proper, well fashioned, minikin, handsome.'

10 This proverbial expression occurs likewise in Lyly's Mother Bombye, 1594.

11 I suspect that brach signifies a greyhound. A lym or lyme was a blood-hound, (see Minsheu's Dict. in voce;) sometimes also called a limmer or leamer; from the leam or leash, in which he was held till he was let slip. In the book of Ancient Tenures, by T. B. 1679, the words 'canes domini regis leasos,' are translated leash hounds, such as draw after hurt deer in a leash or tegam. So Drayton, in The Muses Elysium:—

'My doghook at my belt, to which my lyam's ty'd.'

12 Tijk is the Runic word for a little worthless dog. Trindeltails are mentioned in the Booke of Huntyng, &c. blk. let. no date; and in the old comedy of A Woman Kill'd with Kindness.

13 Sessa; this word occurs before in the fourth Scene of this Act. It is spelled Sessey in both places in the old copy. The same word occurs in the Induction to the Taming of the Shrew, where it is spelled sesa: it appears to have been a corruption of cessez, stop or hold, be quiet, have done.

14 A horn was usually carried about by every Tom of Bedlam, to receive such drink as the charitable might afford him, with whatever scraps of food they might give him. When, therefore, Edgar says his horn is dry or empty, he merely means, in the language of the character he assumes, to supplicate that it might be filled with drink. See A Pleasant Dispute between a Coach and a Sedan, 4to. 1636:—'I have observed when a coach is appendant but two or three hundred pounds

Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan, see what breeds about her heart: Is there any cause in nature, that makes these hard hearts?—You, sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments; you will say, they are Persian attire! but let them be changed.

[To EDGAR.]

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile.¹

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains: So, so, so: We'll go to supper i' the morning: So, so, so.

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Come hither, friend: Where is the king my master?

Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not, his wits are gone.

Glo. Good friend, I pr'ythee take him in thy arms;

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in't,

And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master:

If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in assured loss: Take up, take up;²

And follow me, that will to some provision

Give thee quick conduct.

[Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:³—

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses,

Which, if convenience will not allow,

Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy master;

Thou must not stay behind. [To the Fool.]

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Exeunt KENT, GLOSTER, and the Fool, bearing off the King.]

Edg. When we better see bearing our woes,

We scarcely think our miseries our foes.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' the mind;

Leaving free things, and happy shows, behind:

But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip,

When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that, which makes me bend, makes the king

bow;

He childed, as I father'd!—Tom, away:

Mark the high noises,⁴ and thyself bewray,⁵

When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles

thee,

In thy just proof, repeals, and reconciles thee.

What will hap more to-night, safe scape the king!

Lark, lark. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. A Room in Gloster's Castle. En- ter CORNWALL, REGAN, GONERIL, EDMUND, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband;

show him this letter;—the army of France is landed:—Seek out the villain Gloster.

[Exeunt some of the Servants.]

Reg. Hang him instantly.

a yeere, marke it, the dogges are as leane as rakes;

you may tell all their ribbes lying be the fire; and Tom

a Bedom may sooner eate his horne than get it filled with small drinke, and for his old almes of bacon there is no hope in the world.⁶

1 i. e. on the cushions to which he points.

2 One of the quartos reads, 'Take up the king; the other, 'Take up to keep,' &c.

3 These two concluding speeches, by Kent and Edgar, are restored from the quarto. The soliloquy of Edgar is extremely fine; and the sentiments of it are drawn equally from nature and the subject. Besides, with regard to the stage, it is absolutely necessary; for as Edgar is not designed, in the constitution of the play, to attend the king to Dover, how absurd would it look for a character of his importance to quit the scene without one word said, or the least intimation what we are to expect from him.—Theobald.

4 The great events that are approaching, the loud tumult of approaching war.

5 Betray, discover.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation; we are bound to the like. Our post shall be swift, and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister;—farewell, my lord of Gloster.⁶

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the king?

Stew. My lord of Gloster hath convey'd him hence.

Some five or six and thirty of his knights,

Hot questrists⁷ after him, met him at gate;

Who, with some other of the lord's dependants,

Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast

To have well armed friends.

Corn.

Get horses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exeunt GONERIL and EDMUND.]

Corn. Edmund, farewell.—Go, seek the traitor

Gloster,

Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

[Exeunt other Servants.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life

Without the form of justice; yet our power

Shall do a courtesy⁸ to our wrath, which men

May blame, but not control. Who's there? The traitor?

Re-enter Servants, with GLOSTER.

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky⁹ arms.

Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.]

Reg. Hard, hard:—O, filthy traitor.

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I am none.

Corn. To this chair bind him:—Villain, thou shalt find— [REGAN plucks his Beard.]

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done,

To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glo. Naughty lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken,¹⁰ and accuse thee: I am your host;

With robbers' hands, my hospitable favours¹¹

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

Speak.

Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down,

Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,

And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

6 Meaning Edmund, invested with his father's titles.

The Steward, speaking immediately after, mentions the old earl by the same title.

7 A questrist is one who goes in quest or search of another.

8 'Do a courtesy to our wrath,' simply means bend to our wrath, as a courtesy is made by bending the body. To pass on any one may be traced from Magna

Charta:—'Neque super eum ibimus, nisi per legale judicium parium suorum.' It is common to most of our early writers—'A jury of devils impaneled and deeply sworn to pass on all villains in hell.'—If this be not a Good Play the Devil is in it, 1612.

9 i. e. dry, wither'd, husky arms. This epithet was perhaps borrowed from Harsnet:—'It would pose all the cunning exorcists that are this day to be found, to teach an old corkie woman to writhe, tumble, curvet,

and fetch her morrice gambols as Martha Bressier did.

10 i. e. quicken into life.

11 Favours mean the same as features; that is, the different parts of which a face is composed.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore

To Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.¹

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister In his anointed flesh stick² boarish fangs. The sea, with such a storm as his bare head In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up, And quench'd the stelled³ fires: yet, poor old heart, He help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern⁴ time, Thou should'st have said, Good porter, turn the key; All cruels else subscrib'd:⁵—But I shall see The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shalt thou never:—Fellows, hold the chair:

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.⁶

[GLOSTER is held down in his Chair, while CORNWALL plucks out one of his Eyes, and sets his Foot on it.]

Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old, Give me some help:—O, cruel! O, ye gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,—

Serv. Hold your hand, my lord: have serv'd you ever since I was a child;

But better service have I never done you, Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog?

Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin, I'd shake it on this quarrel; What do you mean?

Corn. My villain! [Draws, and runs at him.]

Serv. Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.

[Draws. They fight. CORN. is wounded.]

Reg. Give me thy sword.—[To another Serv.] A peasant stand up thus!

[Snatches a Sword, comes behind him, and stabs him.]

Serv. O, I am slain!—My lord, you have one eye left

To see some mischief on him:—O! [Dies.]

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it:—Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy lustre now?

[Tears out GLOSTER's other Eye, and throws it on the ground.]

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature, To quit⁷ this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!

1 So in Macbeth:—

'They have chain'd me to a stake; I cannot fly, But, bear-like, I must fight the course.'

2 The quarto reads, 'rash boarish fangs.' To rash is the old hunting term for the stroke made by a wild boar with his fangs.

3 Stalled.

4 Thus the folio. The quartos read, 'that dearn time.' Dearn is dreary. The reading in the text is countenanced by Chapman's version of the 24th Iliad: '— in this so stern^e a time

Of night and danger.'

5 I. e. yielded, submitted to the necessity of the occasion.

6 This horrible exhibition is not more sanguinary than that of some contemporary dramas. In Selimus, Emperor of the Turks, one of the sons of Bajazet, pulls out the eyes of an Aga on the stage, and says:—

Yea, thou shalt live, but never see that day,

Wandering the tapers that should give thee light.

[Pulls out his eyes.]

Immediately after his hands are cut off on the stage. In Marston's Antonio's Revenge, 1602, Piero's tongue is torn out on the stage.

7 Villain is perhaps here used in its original sense, of one in servitude.

8 Requite.

Thou call'st on him that hates thee: 't was he That made the overture⁹ of thy treason to us; Who is too good to pity thee.

Glo. O, my follies!

Then Edgar was abus'd.—

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Dover.—How is't, my lord? How look you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt:—Follow me, lady Turn out that eyeless villain;—throw this slave Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed apace: Untimely comes this hurt: Give me your arm.

[Exit CORNWALL, led by REGAN;— Servants unbind GLOSTER, and lead him out.]

1 Serv. I'll never care what wickedness I do,¹⁰ If this man comes to good.

2 Serv. If she live long, And, in the end, meet the old course of death,¹¹ Women will all turn monsters.

1 Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam

To lead him where he would; his roguish madness Allows itself to any thing.

2 Serv. Go thou; I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,¹²

To apply to his bleeding face. Now, Heaven help him! [Exeunt severally.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The Heath. Enter EDGAR.

Edg. Yet better thus, and know to be contemn'd, Than still contemn'd and flatter'd.¹³ To be worst The lowest, and most dejected thing of fortune, Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear:

The lamentable change is from the best; The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then,¹⁴ Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace!

The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst, Owes nothing to thy blasts.—But who comes here?

Enter GLOSTER, led by an old Man.

My father, poorly led?—World, world, O, world! But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee, Life would not yield to age.¹⁵

Old Man. O, my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone: Thy comforts can do me no good at all, Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes; I stumbled when I saw: Full of 'tis seen,

9 Overture here means an opening, a discovery. 'It was he who first laid thy treasons open to us.'

10 This short dialogue is only found in the quartos. It is, as Theobald observes, full of nature. Servants could hardly see such barbarity committed without pity; and the vengeance that they presume must overtake the actors of it, is a sentiment and doctrine well worthy of the stage and of the great moral poet:

11 I. e. die a natural death.

12 Stevens asserted that this passage was ridiculed by Ben Jonson, in The Case is Altered. Mr. Gifford has shown the folly and falsehood of the assertion; and that it was only a common allusion to a method of stanching blood practised in the poet's time by every barber-surgeon and old woman in the kingdom.

13 'It is better to be thus openly contemned, than to be flattered and secretly contemned.' The expression in this speech, 'owes nothing to thy blasts,' might seem to be copied from Virgil, Æn. xi. 61:—

'Nos juvenem exanimum, et nil jam celestibus ullis Dehentem, vano meatu comitatur honore.'

14 The next two lines and a half are not in the quartos.

15 'O world! if reverses of fortune and changes such as I now see and feel, from ease and affluence to poverty and misery, did not show us the little value of life, we should never submit with any kind of resignation to death, the necessary consequences of old age; we should cling to life more strongly than we do.'

Our mean secures us,¹ and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.—Ah, dear son, Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,²
I'd say, I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now? Who's there?

Edg. [Aside.] O, gods! Who is't can say, I am at the worst?

I am worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet; The worst is not,

So long as we can say, *This is the worst.*³

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glo. Is it a beggar man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

P' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm; My son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him: I have heard more since;

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods;
They kill us for their sport.⁴

Edg. How should this be?—
Bad is the trade must play the fool to sorrow,
Ang'ring itself and others. [Aside.]—Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.
Glo. Then, 'pr'ythee, get thee gone: If, for my sake,

Thou wilt o'ertake me, hence a mile or twain,
P' the way to Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he's mad.

Glo. 'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure:
Above the rest, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,

Come on't what will. [Exit.]
Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.—I cannot daub⁵ it further. [Aside.]

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way, and footpath. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: Bless the good man from the foul fiend!

1 Mean is here put for our moderate or mean conditions. It was sometimes the practice of the poet's age to use the plural, when the subject spoken of related to more persons than one. To avoid the equivocal, Pope changed the reading of the old copy 'to our mean secures us,' which is certainly more intelligible, and may have been the reading intended, as means being spelled with a final e might easily be mistaken for means, which is the reading of the old copy.

2 So in another scene, 'I see it feelingly.'

3 i. e. while we live; for while we yet continue to have a sense of feeling, something worse than the present may still happen. He recalls his former rash conclusion.

4 'Dii nos quasi pilas homines habent.'
Plaut. Captiv. Prolog. i. 22.
Thus also in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. li. :— wretched human kinde

Balles to the starres, &c.
5 i. e. disguise it.

6 So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue.'
King Richard III.

7 'The devil in Ma. Mainy confessed his name to be Modu, and that he had besides himself seven other spirits, and all of them captains, and of great fame. Then Edmundes, (the exorcist) began againe with great earnestness, and all the company cried out, &c.—so as both that wicked prince Modu and his company might be cast out.'—Harsnet, p. 163. This passage will account for 'five fiends having been in poor Tom at once.'

[Five fiends⁶ have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; and Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing; who since possesses chambermaids and waitingwomen.⁷ So, bless thee, master!]

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier:—Heavens, deal so still! Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man, That slaves your ordinance,⁸ that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly, So distribution should undo excess, And each man have enough.—Dost thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head Looks fearfully in⁹ the confined deep: Bring me but to the very brim of it, And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear, With something rich about me: from that place I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm; Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before the DUKE OF ALBANY'S Palace.
Enter GONERIL and EDMUND; Steward meeting them.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, our mild husband!¹⁰

Not met us on the way:—Now, where's your master?

Stew. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd: I told him of the army that was landed; He smil'd at it: I told him, you were coming; His answer was, The worse: of Gloucester's treachery, And of the loyal service of his son, When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side out:—What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him; What like, offensive.

Gon. Then shall you go no further; [To EDMUND:]

Is the coward terror of his spirit, That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs, Which tie him to an answer: Our wishes, on the way,

May prove effects.¹¹ Back, Edmund, to my brother; Hasten his musters, and conduct his powers: I must change arms at home, and give the distaff Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,

7 'If she have a little helpe of the mother, epilepsie, or cramp, to teach her role her eyes, wrie her mouth, gnash her teeth, starte with her body, hold her armes and handes stiffe, make anlike faces, grince, mo and mop, like an ape, then no doubt the young girl is owle-blasted, and possessed.'—Harsnet, p. 136. The five devils here mentioned are the names of five of those who were made to act in this farce, three chambermaids or waiting women, in Mr. Edmund Peckham's family. The reader will now perceive why a coquette is called flibbertigibbet or tittill by Colgrave. See Act iii. Sc. 4. The passage in crochets is omitted in the folio.

8 'Lear has before uttered the same sentiment, which indeed cannot be too strongly impressed, though it may be too often repeated.'—Johnson. To slave an ordinance is to treat it as a slave, to make it subject to us, instead of acting in obedience to it. So in Heywood's Brazen Age, 1613:—

none
Could slave him like the Lydian Omphale.¹
Again, in A New Way to Pay Old Debts, by Massinger:—'that slaves me to his will.' The quartos read, 'That stands your ordinance,' which may be right, says Malone, and means withstands or abides.

9 In is here put for on, as in other places of these plays.

10 It must be remembered that Albany, the husband of Goneril, disliked the scheme of oppression and ingratitude at the end of the first act.

11 'The wishes which we expressed to each other on the way hither, may be completed, may take effect,' perhaps alluding to the destruction of her husband.

If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;
[Giving a Favour.]

Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air;—
Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloucester!

[Exit EDMUND.]

O, the difference of man, and man!

To thee a woman's services are due;

My fool usurps my bed.²

Stew. Madam, here comes my lord.

[Exit Steward.]

Enter ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.³

Alb. O, Goneril!

You art not worth the dust which the rude wind
Blows in your face—I fear your disposition:⁴
That nature, which contemns its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself;
She that herself will sliver⁵ and disbranch
From her material sap,⁶ perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use.⁷

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile:
Filth savour but themselves. What have you done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd?
A father, and a gracious aged man,
Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick,⁸
Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you maddened.
Could my good brother suffer you to do it?
A man, a prince, by him so benefited?
If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
'Twill come,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep.

Gon. Milk-liver'd man!

That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs;
Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
Thine honour from thy suffering; that not know'st,⁹
Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd Ere they have done their mischief!¹⁰ Where's thy drum?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land;
With plumed helm thy slayer begins threats;
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sitt'st still, and cry'st,
Alack! why does he so?

Alb. See thyself, devil!

1 She bids him decline his head, that she might give him a kiss, (the steward being present,) and that might appear only to him as a whisper.

2 Quarto A reads 'my foot usurps my body.' Quarto B, 'my foot usurps my head.' Quarto C, 'a fool usurps my bed.' The folio reads, 'my foot usurps my body.'

3 Alluding to the proverb, 'It is a poor dog that is not worth the whistling.' Goneril's meaning seems to be, 'There was a time when you would have thought me worth the calling to you,' reproaching him for not having summoned her to consult with on the present occasion.

4 These words and the lines following, to monsters of the deep, are not in the folio. They are necessary to explain the reasons of the detestation which Albany here expresses to his wife.

5 So in Macbeth:—

— elips of yew

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse.

6 'She who breaks the bonds of filial duty, and becomes wholly alienated from her father, must wither and perish, like a branch separated from that trunk or body which supplied it with sap.' There is a peculiar propriety in the use of the word material: materia, Lat. signifying the trunk or body of the tree.

7 Alluding to the use that witches and enchanters are said to make of withered branches in their charms. A fine insinuation in the speaker, that she was ready for the most unnatural mischief, and a preparative of the poet to her plotting with the bastard against her husband's life.—Warburton. Dr. Warburton might have adduced the passage from Macbeth above quoted in support of his ingenious interpretation.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid, as in woman.¹¹

Gon. O, vain fool!

Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd¹² thing, for shame,

Be-monster not thy feature.¹³ Were it my fitness

To let these hands obey my blood,¹⁴

They are apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones;—Howe'er thou art a fiend,

A woman's shape doth shield thee,

Gon. Marry, your manhood now!

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O, my good lord, the Duke of Cornwall's dead;

Slain by his servant, going to put out

The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes?

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse

Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword

To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,

Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead:

But not without that harmful stroke, which since

Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,

You justicers, that these our nether crimes

So speedily can vengeance!—But, O, poor Gloucester!

Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.—

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;

'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well;¹⁵

But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,

May all the building in my fancy pluck

Upon my hateful life: Another way,

The new is not so tart.—I'll read and answer. [Exit.]

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment

Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I live

To thank thee for the love thou show'st the king,

And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither, friend;

Tell me what more thou knowest. [Exeunt.]

8 This line is not in the folio.

9 The rest of this speech is also omitted in the folio.

10 'Goneril means to say that none but fools would be excited to commiserate those who are prevented from executing their malicious designs, and punished for their evil intention.' Malone doubts whether Goneril alludes to her father, but surely there cannot be a doubt that she does, and to the pity for his sufferings expressed by Albany, whom she means indirectly to call a fool for expressing it.

11 That is, 'Diabolic qualities appear not so horrid in the devil, to whom they belong, as in woman, who un-naturally assumes them.'

12 The meaning appears to be 'thou that hast hid the woman under the fiend; thou that hast disguised nature by wickedness.' Steevens thinks that there may be an allusion to the coverings which insects furnish to themselves, like the silkworm, that—

'labours till it clouds itself all o'er.'

13 It has been already observed that feature was often used for form or person in general, the figure of the whole body.

14 My blood is my passion, my inclination. This verse wants a foot, which Theobald purposed to supply by reading 'boiling blood.'

15 Goneril's plan was to poison her sister, to marry Edmund, to murder Albany, and to get possession of the whole kingdom. As the death of Cornwall facilitated the last part of her scheme, she was pleased at it; but disliked it, as it put it in the power of her sister to marry Edmund.

[SCENE III.] *The French Camp near Dover.Enter KENT, and a Gentleman.*²*Kent.* Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?³*Gent.* Something he left imperfect in the state, Which since his coming forth is thought of; which Imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, That his personal return was most required, And necessary.Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?Gent. The Mareschal of France, Monsieur le Fer.Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen Over her passion; who, most rebel-like, Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strove Who should express her goodliest. You have seen Sunshine and rain at once; her smiles and tears Were like;—a better way.⁴ Those happy smiles, That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence, As pearls from diamonds dropp'd.⁵—In brief, sorrow Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all Could so become it.Kent. Made she no verbal question?Gent. Faith, once, or twice, she heav'd the name of father

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;

Cried, *Sisters! sisters!—Shame of ladies! sisters! Kent! father! sisters! What! i' the storm? i' the night?Let pity not be believed!*⁶—There she shook The holy water from her heavenly eyes, And clamour moisten'd:⁷ then away she started To deal with grief alone.Kent. It is the stars, The stars above us, govern our conditions;¹⁰Else one self mate and mate,¹¹ could not beget Such different issues. You spoke not with her since?Gent. No.Kent. Was this before the king return'd?Gent. No, since.Kent. Well, sir; the poor distress'd Lear is i' the town:

Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers

What we are come about, and by no means

Will yield to see his daughter.

Gent.

Why, good sir?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him: his own unkindness,

That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights

To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things sting

His mind so venomously, that burning shame

Detains him from Cordelia.

Gent.

Alack, poor gentleman!

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you heard not?Gent. 'Tis so, they are afoot.Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear,And leave you to attend him: some dear cause!¹²

Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;

When I am known aright, you shall not grieve

Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go

Along with me. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Tent. Enter Cordelia, Physician, and Soldiers.Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now As mad as the vex'd sea: singing aloud; Crown'd with rank fumiter,¹³ and furrow weeds, With harlocks,¹⁴ hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers, Darnel,¹⁵ and all the idle weeds that grow In our sustaining corn.—A century send forth; Search every acre in the high grown field, And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.]—What can man's wisdom do,¹⁶ simply in the smiles seeming unconscious of the tears, whereas the sunshine has a watery look through the falling drops of rain—

“—Those happy smiles,

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guests were in her eyes.”

‘That the point of comparison was neither a “better day,” nor a “wetter May,” is proved by the following passages, cited by Stevens and Malone:—“Her tears came dropping down like rain in sunshine.”—Sidney's Arcadia, p. 244.

‘I may justly observe, as perhaps an illustration, that the better way of Charity is that the right hand should not know what the left hand giveth.’

5 The quartos read smilets, which may be a diminutive of the poet's coining.6 Stevens would read dropping, but as must be understood to signify as if. I do not think that jewelled pendants were in the poet's mind. A similar beautiful thought in Middleton's Game of Chess has caught the eye of Milton:—

“—the holy dew lies like a pearl

Dropt from the opening eyelids of the morn

Upon the bashful rose.”

7 i. e. discourse, conversation.

8 i. e. let not pity be supposed to exist. It is not impossible but Shakespeare might have formed this fine picture of Cordelia's agony from holy writ, in the conduct of Joseph, who, being no longer able to restrain the vehemence of his affection, commanded all his retinue from his presence; and then wept aloud, and discovered himself to his brethren.—Theobald.

9 That is, ‘her outcries were accompanied with tears.’

10 Conditions are dispositions.

11 i. e. the selfsame husband and wife.

12 Important business.

13 i. e. fumitory, written by the old herbalists fumitory.14 The quartos read hardocks, the folio hardokes. Drayton mentions harlocks in one of his Eclogues:—

‘The honey-suckle, the harlocke,

The lily, and the lady-smocke,’ &c.

Perhaps the charlock, sinapis arvensis, or wild mustard, may be meant.

15 Darnel, according to Gerard, is the most hurtful of weeds among corn.

16 Stevens says that do should be omitted as needless¹ This scene is left out in the folio copy, but is necessary to continue the story of Cordelia, whose behaviour is most beautifully painted.² The gentlemen whom he sent in the foregoing act with letters to Cordelia.³ The King of France being no longer a necessary personage, it was fit that some pretext for getting rid of him should be formed before the play was too near advanced towards a conclusion. Decency required that a monarch should not be silently shuffled into the pack of insignificant characters; and therefore his dismissal, (which could be effected only by a sudden recall to his own dominions,) was to be accounted for before the audience. For this purpose, among others, the present scene was introduced. It is difficult to say what use could have been made of the king, had he appeared at the head of his own armament, and survived the murder of his queen. His conjugal concern on the occasion might have weakened the effect of Lear's paternal sorrow; and, being an object of respect as well as pity, he would naturally have divided the spectator's attention, and thereby diminished the consequence of Albany, Edgar, and Kent, whose exemplary virtues deserved to be ultimately placed in the most conspicuous point of view.—*Steevens*⁴ Both the quartos read, ‘were like a better way.’ Stevens reads, upon the suggestion of Theobald, ‘a better day,’ with a long and somewhat ingenious, though unsatisfactory argument in defence of it. Warburton reads, ‘a wetter May,’ which is plausible enough. Malone adopts a part of his emendation, and reads ‘a better May.’ I have been favoured by Mr. Boaden with the following solution of this passage, which, as it preserves the reading of the old copy, merits attention:—‘The difficulty has arisen from a general mistake as to the smile itself; and Shakespeare's own words here actually convey his perfect meaning, as indeed they commonly do. I understand the passage thus:—

“—You have seen Sunshine and rain at once; her smiles and tears Were like; a better way.”

⁵ That is, Cordelia's smiles and tears were like the conjunction of sunshine and rain, in a better way or manner. Now in what did this better way consist? Why

In the restoring his bereaved sense?
He, that helps him, take all my outward worth.

Phy. There is means, madam :
Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks ; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears ! be aidant, and remediate,
In the good man's distress !—Seek, seek for him ;
Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it.¹

Enter a Messenger.

Mesa. Madam, news ;
The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis known before ; our preparation stands
In expectation of them.—O, dear father,
It is thy business that I go about ;
Therefore great France
My mourning, and important² tears, hath pitied.
No blown³ ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our aged father's right :
Soon may I hear, and see him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. *A Room in Gloster's Castle. Enter
REGAN and Steward.*

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth ?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Reg. Himself,
In person there ?

Stew. Madam, with much ado :
Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spoke not with your lord at home ?

Stew. No, madam.

Reg. What might import my sister's letter to him ?

Stew. I know not, lady.

Reg. 'Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.
It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live ; where he arrives, he moves
All hearts against us : Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despatch
His nighted life ;⁴ moreover, to descry
The strength o' the enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow ; stay with us ;
The ways are dangerous.

Stew. I may not, madam ;
My lady charg'd my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund ? Might not you to the sense of the passage, and injurious to the metre.

Thus in Hamlet :—

'Try what repentance can ; What can it not ?'

Do, in either place, is understood, though suppressed.
Do is found in none of the old copies but quarto B.

1 i. e. the reason which should guide it.

2 Important for importunate, as in other places of these plays. See Comedy of Errors, Act v. Sc. 1. The folio reads importuned.

3 No inflated, no swelling pride.

4 Quam bene te ambitio mersit vanissima, ventus,
Et tumidos tumidas vos superastis aquae.

Beza on the Spanish Armada.

So in The Little French Lawyer of Beaumont and Fletcher :—

'I come with no blown spirit to abuse you.'

4 i. e. his life made dark as night, by the extinction of his eyes.

5 'I know not well (says Johnson) why Shakspeare gives the Steward, who is a mere factor for wickedness, so much fidelity. He now refuses the letter ; and afterwards, when he is dying, thinks only how it may be safely delivered.'—Johnson.

'Surely when Dr. Johnson made this note, he did not recollect the character Edgar gives of this Steward after he is dead :—

'As dutious to the vices of thy mistress

'As badness could require.'

'Fidelity in agents of wickedness is, I fear, not so uncommon as to be unfit for the general probability of dramatic manners.'—Pye

Transport her purposes by word ? Belike,
Something—I know not what :—I'll love thee much
Let me unseal the letter.'

Stew. Madam, I had rather—

Reg. I know, your lady does not love her husband ;
I am sure of that : and, at her late being here,
She gave strange ceiliads,⁶ and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund : I know, you are of her bosom.

Stew. I, madam ?

Reg. I speak in understanding ; you are, I know it :
Therefore, I do advise you, take this note :⁷

My lord is dead ; Edmund and I have talk'd ;

And more convenient is he for my hand,

Than for your lady's :—You may gather more.

If you do find him, pray you, give him this ;⁸

And when your mistress hears thus much from you,

I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her,

So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,

Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Stew. 'Would, I could meet him, madam ! I would show

What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.¹⁰ The Country near Dover. Enter GLOSTER, and EDGAR, dressed like a Peasant.

Glo. When shall we come to the top of that same hill ?

Edg. You do climb up it now ; look, how we labour,

Glo. Methinks the ground is even.

Edg. Horrib steep :

Hark, do you hear the sea ?

Glo. No, truly.¹¹

Edg. Why, then your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes' anguish.

Glo. So may it be, indeed :

Methinks, thy voice is alter'd ;¹² and thou speak'st
In better phrase, and matter, than thou didst.

Edg. You are much deceiv'd ; in nothing am I chang'd,
But in my garments.

Glo. Methinks, you are better spoken.

Edg. Come on, sir ; here's the place :—stand still.—How fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low !

The crows, and choughs, that wing the midway air,

Show scarce so gross as beetles : Half way down

Hangs one that gathers samphire ;¹³ dreadful trade !

Methinks, he seems no bigger than his head :

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,

Appear like mice ; and yon' tall anchoring bark,

Diminish'd to her cock ;¹⁴ her cock, a buoy

Almost too small for sight : The murmuring surge,

That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,

Cannot be heard so high ;—I'll look no more ;

6 Ceillade, Fr. a cast, or significant glance of the eye.

7 That is, observe what I am saying.

8 You may infer more than I have directly told you.

9 Perhaps a ring, or some token, is given to the steward by Regan to be conveyed to Edmund.

10 This scene, and the stratagem by which Gloster is cured of his desperation, are wholly borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, book ii.

11 Something to complete the measure seems wanting in this or the foregoing hemistich. The quartos read as one line :—

'Horrible steep : hark, do you hear the sea ?'

12 Edgar alters his voice in order to pass afterwards for a malignant spirit.

13 Samphire grows in great plenty on most of the sea cliffs in this country : it is terrible to see how people gather it, hanging by a rope several fathom from the top of the impending rocks, as it were in the air.—Smith's History of Waterford, p. 315, edit. 1774.—Dover Cliff was particularly resorted to for this plant, according to Drayton, Polyolbion, b. xviii.—

'Rob Dover's neighbouring cleaves of samphire, to excite

His dull and sickly taste, and stir up appetite.'
It is still eaten as a pickle in those parts of England bordering on the southern coast.

14 i. e. her cock-bout. Hence the term cock-gram.

Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple¹ down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.
Edg. Give me your hand: You are now within a foot

Of the extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.
Here, friend, is another purse; in it a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking: Fairies, and gods,
Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off;
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir. [Seems to go.]

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo. O, you mighty gods!
This world I do renounce; and, in your sights
Shake patiently my great affliction off:
If I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff, and loathed part of nature, should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!—
Now, fellow, fare thee well.

[He leaps and falls along.]

Edg. Gone, sir? farewell.—
And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft:² Had he been where he thought,
By this, had thought been past.—Alive, or dead?
Ho, you sir! friend!—Hear you, sir?—speak!
Thus might he pass indeed:³—Yet he revives:
What are you, sir?

Glo. Away, and let me die.
Edg. Had'st thou been ought but gossamer,⁴ feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou had'st shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe;

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.

Ten masts at each⁵ make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell;
Thy life's a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn:⁶

Look up a-height;—the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes.—

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm:
Up:—So;—How is't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangeness.
Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd,⁷ and wav'd like the enridged sea;
It was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest⁸ gods, who make them honours

Of men's impossibilities,⁹ have preserv'd thee.

Glo. I do remember now; henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself,
Enough, enough, and, die. That thing you speak of,
I took it for a man; often 'twould say,

The fiend, the fiend: he led me to that place

Edg. Bear free!¹⁰ and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

Enter LEAR, fantastically dressed up with Flowers.

The safer sense¹¹ will ne'er accommodate His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining;
I am the king himself.

Edg. O, thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect. There's your press-money.¹² That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper:¹³ draw me a clothier's yard.— Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace;—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.—There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant.—Bring up the brown bills.¹⁴—
O, well flown, bird!—i' the clout, i' the clout!
hewh!—Give the word.¹⁵

Edg. Sweet majoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goneril!—with a white beard!—
They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say ay, and no, to every thing I said!—

because its shell is marked with convolved protuberant ridges.

⁸ That is, the purest; the most free from evil. So in Timon of Athens:—'Roots! you clear gods!

⁹ By men's impossibilities perhaps is meant what men call impossibilities, what appear as such to mere mortal beings.

¹⁰ 'Bear free and patient thoughts.' Free here means pure, as in other places of these plays.

¹¹ 'The safer sense' (says Mr. Blakeway) seems to me to mean the eyesight, which, says Edgar, will never more serve the unfortunate Lear so well as those which Gloster has remaining will serve him, who is now returned to a right mind. Horace terms the eyes 'oculi fidelis,' and the eyesight may be called the safer sense in allusion to the proverb 'Seeing is believing.' Gloster afterwards laments the stiffness of his vile sense."

¹² It is evident from the whole of this speech that Lear fancied himself in a battle. For the meaning of press-money, see the first scene of Hamlet, which will also serve to explain the passage in Act v. Sc. 2:—

'And turn our imprest lances in our eyes.'

¹³ 'Or if thou'lt not thy archery forbear,

To some base rustick do thyself prefer;

And when corn's sown, or grown into the ear,

Practice thy quiver and turn crow-keeper.'

Drayton, Idea the Forty-eighth.

Ascham, in speaking of awkward shooters, says:—
'Another cowereth down, and layeth out his buttocks as though he would shoot at crows.'

The subsequent expression of Lear, 'draw me a clothier's yard,' Steevens thinks, alludes to the old ballad of Chevy Chase:—

'An arrow of a cloth yard long,

Up to the head he drew,' &c.

¹⁴ Battleaxes.

¹⁵ Lear is here raving of archery, falconry, and a

¹ To topple is to tumble: the word is again used in Macbeth. So in Nashe's Lenten Stuffe, 1599:—'Fifty people toppled up their heels there.'

² That is, 'when life is willing to be destroyed.'

³ 'Thus might he die in reality.' We still use the word passing-bell. So in King Henry VI. Part II. i:—
'Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.'

⁴ 'The substance called gossamer is formed of the collected webs of flying spiders, and during calm weather in autumn sometimes falls in amazing quantities.'—Holt White. Some think it the down of plants; others the vapour arising from boggy or marshy ground in warm weather. The etymon of this word, which has puzzled the lexicographers, is said to be summer goose or summer gauze, hence 'gauze o'the summer,' its well known name in the north. See Horæ Mementæ Cravenæ, or the Craven Dialect Exemplified, 1824, 8vo. p. 79.

⁵ I. e. drawn out at length, or each added to the other. 'Eche, exp. draw out, ab Anglo Saxon elcan, elcian, Diferre, vel a verb. to eak.' Skinner, Etymolog.
Skinner is right in his last derivation, it is from the Anglo-Saxon elcan, to add. Thus Chaucer, in The House of Fame, b. iii. v. 973:—

—'gan somewhat to eche,
To this tlding in his speche.'

And in Troilus and Cresside, b. i. v. 706:—

'As doen these foolles, that hit sorrowes eche.'

Pope changed this to attach; Johnson would read on end; Steevens proposes at reach. Ignorance of our earlier language has been the stumbling-block of all these eminent critics.

⁶ I. e. this chalky boundary of England.

⁷ Welk'd is marked with protuberances. This and whelk are probably only different forms of the same word. The welk is a small shellfish, so called, perhaps,

Ay and no too was no good divinity.¹ When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found them, there I smelt them out. Go to, they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie; I am not ague proof.

Glo. The trick² of that voice I do well remember: Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch, a king: When I do stare, see how the subject quakes. I pardon'd that man's life: what was thy cause?—Adultery.

Thou shalt not die; Die for adultery! No:

The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive, for Gloster's bastard son Was kinder to his father, than my daughters Got 'tween the lawful sheets.

To't, luxury,³ pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—

Behold yon simpering dame, Whose face between her forks presageth snow;⁴ That minces⁵ virtue, and does shake the head To hear of pleasure's name;

The fitchew, nor the soiled horse,⁶ goes to't With a more riotous appetite.

Down from the waist they are centaurs,

Though women all above;

But to the girdle do the gods inherit,⁷

Beneath is all the fiends'; there's hell, there's darkness,

There is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption:—Fie, fie, fie! pah; pah! Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand!

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

Glo. O, ruin'd piece of nature! This great world Shall so wear out to nought.—Dost thou know me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squiny at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid! I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters suns, I could not see one.

Edg. I would not take this from report;—it is, And my heart breaks at it.

battle, jumbled together in quick transition. 'Well flown bird' was the falconer's expression when the hawk was successful in her flight; it is so used in A Woman Kill'd by Kindness. The clout is the white mark at which archers aim. By 'give the word,' the watchword in a camp is meant. The quartos read, 'O well flown bird in the ayre, hugh, give the word.'

1 It has been proposed to read, 'To say ay and no to every thing I said ay and no to, was no good divinity.' Besides the inaccuracy of construction in the passage as it stands in the text, it does not appear how it could be flattery to dissent from as well as assent to every thing Lear said.

2 Trick is a word used for the air, or peculiarity in a face, voice, or gesture, which distinguishes it from others. We still say he has a trick of winking with his eyes, &c.

3 i. e. incontinence.

4 The construction is, 'Whose face presageth snow between her forks.' So in Timon of Athens, Act iv. Sc. 3:—

'Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow That lies on Dian's lap.'

See Cotgrave's Dict. in v. Fourcheure.

5 i. e. puts on an outward affected seeming of virtue. See Cotgrave in v. Mineux-se. He also explains it under 'Paire la sadinette, to mince it, nicofie it, be very squeamish, backward, or coy.'

6 The fitchew is the polecat. A soiled horse is a horse that has been fed with hay and corn during the winter, and is turned out in the spring to take the first flush of grass, or has it cut and carried to him. This at once cleanses the animal and fills him with blood. In the old copies the preceding as well as the latter part of Lear's speech is printed as prose. It is doubtful whether any part of it was intended for metre.

7 But in its exceptive sense.

8 Possessive.

9 From 'hide all' to 'accuser's lips' is wanting in the quartos.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case of eyes?

Lear. O, no, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: Yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears; see how yon' justice rails upon yon' simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: Change places; and handily, which is the justice, which is the thief?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur? There thou might'st behold the great image of authority; A dog's obey'd in office.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand:

Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back:

Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind

For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear Robes, and furr'd gowns, hide all.¹⁰ Plate sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:

Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

None does offend, none, I say none; I'll able 'em;¹¹

Take that of me, my friend, who have the power

To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;

And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now, now, now:

Pull off my boots;—harder, harder; and so.

Edg. O, matter and impertinency!¹² mix'd!

Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloster:

Thou must be patient; we came crying hither.

Thou know'st at the first time that we smell the air,

We wawl, and cry:¹³—I will preach to thee; mark me.

Glo. Alack, alack the day!

Lear. When we are born, we cry that we are come

To this great stage of fools;—This a good block?¹⁴

10 i. e. support or uphold them. So Chapman, in the Widow's Tears, 1612:—

'Admitted! ay, into her heart, and I'll able it.'

Again, in his version of the twenty-third Illiad:—

'I'll able this'

For five revolved years.'

11 Impertinency here is used in its old legitimate sense of something not belonging to the subject.

12 'The child feels that, the man that feeling knows, Which cries first borne, the passage of his life,' &c. Sidney's Arcadia, lib. ii.

The passage is, however, evidently taken from Pliny, as translated by Philemon Holland, Prome to b. vii.—

'Man alone, poor wretch [nature] hath laid all naked upon the bare earth, even on his birthday to cry una veracile presently from the very first hours that he is borne into this world.'—Douce.

13 Upon the king's saying 'I will preach to thee,' the poet seems to have meant him to pull off his hat, and keeping it and feeling it, in the attitude of one of the preachers of those times (whom I have seen represented in ancient prints) till the idea of felt which the good hat or block was made of, raises the stratagem in his brain of shoeing a troop of horse with the [same substance] which he held and moulded between his hands. So in Decker's Gull's Hornbook, 1609:—'That cannot observe the tune of his hatband, nor know what fashioned block is most kin to his head: for in my opinion the brain cannot chuse his felt well.' Again, in Run and a Great Cast, no date, Epigram 46, in Sextinus:—

'A pretty blocke Sextinus names his hat,

So much the fitter for his head by that.'

This delicate stratagem is mentioned by Ariosto:—

'— fece nel cadar strepito quanto

Avesse avuto sotto i piedi feltro.'

So in Fenton's Tragical Discourses, 4to. bk. i. 1567:—

'He attyreth himself for the purpose in a night-gowne

It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe
A troop of horse with felt : I'll put it in proof ;
And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is, lay hand upon him.—Sir,
Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue ? What, a prisoner ? I am even
The natural fool of fortune.²—Use me well ;
You shall have ransom. Let me have a surgeon,
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds ? All myself ?
Why, this would make a man, a man of salt,³
To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
Ay, and for laying autumn's dust.

Gent. Good sir,—

Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridegroom :
What ?

I will be jovial ; come, come ; I am a king,
My masters, know you that !

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in it.⁴ Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.⁵

[Exit, running ; Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch ;
Past speaking of in a king !—Thou hast one daughter
Who redeems nature from the general curse
Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you : What's your will ?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle to ward ?

Gent. Most sure and vulgar : every one hears that,

Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour,

How near's the other army ?

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot, the main descry
Stands on the hourly thought.⁶

Edg. I thank you, sir : that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here,

Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, sir. [Exit Gent.]

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from
me ;

Let not my wors'er spirit tempt me again

To die before you please !

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good sir, what are you ?

Edg. A most poor man, made lame by fortune's blows :⁷

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,⁸

Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,

I'll lead you to some biding.

girl to hym, with a payre of shoes of felte leaste the noyse of his feete might discover his goinge,⁹ p. 58.—
It had, however, been actually put in practice about fifty years before Shakspeare was born, at a tournament held at Lisle before Henry the VIII. [Oct. 13, 1513.]
where the horses, to prevent their sliding on a black stone pavement, were shod with felt or flocks (feltro sive tomento.) See Lord Herbert's Life of King Henry VIII. p. 41.

² This was the cry formerly in the English army when an onset was made on the enemy. So in Venus and Adonis :—

'Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, Kill, kill.'

³ So in Romeo and Juliet :—'O, I am fortune's fool.'

⁴ 'A man of salt' is a man of tears. In All's Well that Ends Well, we meet with 'Your salt tears head.' And in Troilus and Cressida, 'the salt of broken tears.' Again, in Coriolanus :—

'He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome.'

⁵ The case is not yet desperate. So in Antony and Cleopatra :—'There's sap in't yet.'

⁶ Mr. Boswell thinks that this passage seems to prove that cessa means the very reverse of cesses. See p. 414, and p. 416, note 13, ante.

⁷ The main body is expected to be desecrated every hour.

Glo. Hearty thanks :

The bounty and the benizon of heaven
To boot, and boot !

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize ! Most happy !
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor,
Briefly thyself remember :¹⁰—The sword is out
That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to it. [Edgar opposes.]

Stew. Wherefore, bold peasant,
Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor ? Hence ;
Lest that the infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Ch'll not let go, zir, without further 'casion.

Stew. Let go, slave, or thou diest.

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait,¹¹ and let poor volk pass. And 'chud ha' been zwagger'd out of my life, 'twould not ha' been zo long as 'tis by a vornight. Nay, come not near the old man ; keep out, che vor'ye,¹² or ise try whether your costard¹³ or my bat be the harder : Ch'll be plain with you.

Stew. Out, dunghill !

Edg. Ch'll pick your teeth, zir ; Come ; no matter vor your foins.¹⁴

[They fight ; and Edgar knocks him down.]

Stew. Slave, thou hast slain me :—Villain, take my purse ;

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body ;
And give the letters, which thou find'st about me,
To Edmund earl of Gloster ; seek him out
Upon the British party :—O, untimely death

[Dies.]

Edg. I know thee well : A serviceable villain ;
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire.

Glo. What, is he dead ?

Edg. Sit you down, father ; rest you.—

Let's see his pockets ; these letters, that he speaks of,
May be my friends.—He's dead : I am only sorry
He had no other deathman.—Let us see :
Leave, gentle wax ; and, manners, blame us not :
To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts
Their papers, is more lawful.¹⁵

[Reads.] Let our reciprocal vows be remembered.
You have many opportunities to cut him off ; if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.
There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror :
Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal ; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.

Your wife, (so I would say,) and your affectionate servant,

CONRAD.

O undistinguish'd space of woman's will !¹⁶—

A plot upon her virtuous husband's life ;

And the exchange, my brother !—Here, in the sands,

⁷ By this expression may be meant 'my evil genius.'

⁸ The folio reads 'made tame by fortune's blows.'
The original is probably the true reading. So in Shak-speare's thirty-seventh Sonnet :—

'So I, made tame by fortune's dearest spight.'

⁹ Feeling is probably used here for felt. Sorrows known not by relation, but by experience. Warburton explains it, 'Sorrows past and present.'

¹⁰ i. e. 'Quickly recollect the past offences of thy life, and recommend thyself to heaven.'

¹¹ Gang your gait, is a common expression in the north. In the last rebellion, the Scotch soldiers, when they had finished their exercise, were dismissed by this phrase, 'gang your gait.'

¹² i. e. I warn you. When our ancient writers have occasion to introduce a rustic, they commonly allot him the Somersetshire dialect. Golding, in his translation of the second book of Ovid's Metamorphoses, makes Mercury, assuming the appearance of a clown, speak with the provinciality of Edgar.

¹³ i. e. head. A bat is a staff. It is the proper name of a walking-stick in Sussex even at this day.

¹⁴ i. e. thrusts.

¹⁵ i. e. to rip their papers is more lawful.

¹⁶ This seems to me to mean, 'O how inordinate, how unbounded is the licentious inclination of women.'

Thou'lt rake up, the post unsanctified¹
Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke:² for him 'tis well,
That of thy death and business I can tell.

[Exit EDGAR, dragging out the Body.]

Glo. The king is mad: How stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling³
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Give me your hand:
Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. A Tent in the French Camp. LEAR on a Bed asleep: Physician, Gentleman,⁴ and others attending: Enter CORDELIA and KENT.

Cor. O, thou good Kent, how shall I live, and work,
To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'erpaid.
All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited:⁵
These weeds are memories⁶ of those worse hours;
I prythee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam;
Yet to be known, shortens my made intent:⁷
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord.—How does the king? [To the Physician.]

Phys. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O, you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father!⁸

Phys. So please your majesty,
That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed
I' the away of your own will. Is he array'd?

Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep,
We put fresh garments on him.

Phys. Be by, good madam, when we do awake
him;

I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well.

Phys. Please you, draw near.—Louder the music
there.⁹

Cor. O, my dear father! Restoration,¹⁰ hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!

Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Had challeng'd pity on them. Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?

[To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke

Of quick, cross lightning? to watch (poor perdu!)
With this thin helm?¹¹ Mine enemy's dog,

Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire; And wast thou fain, poor father,

To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!

'Tis wonder, that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.¹²—He wakes; speak to him.

Phys. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o' the grave:—

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know; When did you die?

Cor. Still, still, far wide!

Phys. He's scarce awake; let him alone awhile.

Lear. Where have I been? Where am I?—Fair day-light?—

I am mightily abus'd.¹³—I should even die with pity,
To see another thus.—I know not what to say.—

I will not swear, these are my hands:—let's see;

I feel this pin prick. 'Would, I were assur'd
Of my condition.

Cor. O, look upon me sir,

And hold your hands in benediction o'er me

No, sir, you must not kneel.¹⁴

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,

Fourscore and upward;¹⁵ and, to deal plainly,
I fear, I am not in my perfect mind.

Methinks, I should know you, and know this man:
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant

What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not

Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at me;

1 'Thou'lt rake up, the post unsanctified,' &c.
l. a. I'll cover thee. In Staffordshire, to rake the fire, is to cover it for the night. Unsanctified refers to his want of burial in consecrated ground.

2 That is, the Duke of Albany, whose death is machinated by practice or treason.

3 'Ingenious feeling.' Bullokar, in his Expositor, interprets ingenious by quick conceived, l. a. acute. This makes Warburton's paraphrase unnecessary.

4 In the folio, the Gentleman and the Physician are one and the same person.

5 i. e. be better dressed, put on a better suit of clothes.

6 Memories are memorials.

7 A made intent is an intent formed. We say in common language to make a design, and to make a resolution.

8 That is, changed by his children; a father whose jarring senses have been untuned by the monstrous ingratitude of his daughters. So care-crazed, crazed by care; wo-wearied, wearied by wo, &c.

9 This and the foregoing speech are not in the folio. It has been already observed that Shakspeare considered soft music as favourable to sleep. Lear, we may suppose, had been thus composed to rest; and now the Physician desires louder music to be played, for the purpose of waking him. So again in Pericles, Cerimon, to recover Thaisa, who had been thrown into the sea, says:—

'The rough and woful music that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you.'

Again in the Winter's Tale:—

'Music awake her, strike!'

10 Restoration is no more than recovery personified.

11 The lines in crotchets are not in the folio. The allusion is to the forlorn hope of an army, called in French enfants perdus; amongst other desperate adventures in which they were engaged, the night-watches seem to have been a common one. Warburton is wrong in supposing that those ordered on such services were lightly or badly armed; the contrary is clearly the fact, and to such a fact is the allusion of the poet, 'Poor perdu, you are exposed to the most dangerous situation, not with the most proper arms, but with a mere helmet of thin and hoary hair.' The same allusion occurs in Dave-nant's Love and Honour, 1649:—

————— I have endured
Another night would tire a perdu
More than a wet furrow and a great frost.'

So in Beaumont and Fletcher's Little French Lawyer:—

'I am set here like a perdu
To watch a fellow that has wrong'd my mistress.'

12 l. e. had not all ended. So in Timon of Athens:—
'And dispossess her all.'

13 I am strangely imposed upon by appearances; I am in a strange mist of uncertainty.

14 'This circumstance is found in the old play of King Lear, apparently written by another hand, and published before any edition of Shakspeare's play had made its appearance. As it is always difficult to say whether such accidental resemblances proceed from imitation, or a similarity of thinking on the same occasion, I can only point out this to the reader, to whose determination I leave the question.'—Stereens.

15 The folio here adds the words 'not an hour more or less.' Which, as they are absurd and superfluous, have been justly degraded as the interpolation of some inconsiderate player.

For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am,

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not:

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know, you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,
You see, is cur'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even¹ o'er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more,
Till further settling.

Cor. Will 't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me:

'Pray now, forget and forgive: I am old, and foolish.
[Exeunt LEAR, CORDELIA, Physician, and Attendants.]

[Gent. Holds it true, sir,
That the Duke of Cornwall was so slain?

Kent. Most certain, sir.

Gent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 'tis said,

The bastard son of Gloster.

Gent. They say, Edgar,

His banish'd son, is with the Earl of Kent
In Germany.

Kent. Report is changeable.

'Tis time to look about; the powers o' the kingdom
Approach apace.

Gent. The arbitrement is like to be a bloody.

Fare you well, sir. [Exit.]

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,

Or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought.² [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover. Enter, with Drums, and Colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Edm. Know of the duke, if his last purpose hold;
Or, whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course: He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving:—bring his constant pleasure.³

[To an Officer, who goes out.]

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'Tis to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord,

You know the goodness I intend upon you:

Tell me,—but truly,—but then speak the truth,

Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

1 'To make him even o'er the time he has lost,' is to make the occurrences of it plain or level to his troubled mind. See Baret's Alvearie, 1573, E. 307.

2 What is printed in crotchets is not in the folio. It is at least proper, if not necessary, and was perhaps only omitted by the players to abridge a play of very considerable length.

3 i. e. his settled resolution.

4 The first and last of these speeches within crotchets are inserted in Hamner's, Theobald's, and Warburton's editions, the two intermediate ones, which were omitted in all others, are restored from the 4to. 1603. Whether they were left out through negligence, or because the imagery contained in them might be thought too luxuriant, I cannot determine; but surely a material injury is done to the character of the Bastard by the omission; for he is made to deny that flatly at first, which the poet only meant to make him evade, or return slight answers to, till he is urged so far as to be obliged to shelter himself under an immediate falsehood. Query, however, whether Shakspeare meant us to believe that Edmund had actually found his way to the forefended (i. e. forbidden) place?—Steevens.

5 Imposes on you; you are deceived.

6 'This business (says Albany) touches us, as France invades our land, not as it emboldens or encourages the

[Reg. But have you never found my brother's way
To the forefended⁶ place?

Edm. That thought abuses⁷ you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct
And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.]

Reg. I never shall endure her: Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm.

Fear me not:—

She, and the duke her husband,—

Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldier

Gon. I had rather lose the battle, than that sister
Should loosen him and me. [Aside.]

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be met.—

Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his daughter,
With others, whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. [Where I could not be honest⁸

I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us as France invades our land,

Not bolds⁹ the king; with others, whom, I fear,

More just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.

Reg.

Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy:

For these domestic and particular broils¹⁰

Are not to question here.

Alb.

Let us then determine

With the ancient of war on our proceedings.

Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.¹¹

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'Tis most convenient; 'pray you, go with us.

Gon. O, ho, I know the riddle: [Aside.] I will go.

As they are going out, enter EDGAR, disguised.

Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,

Hear me one word.

Alb.

I'll overtake you.—Speak.

[Exeunt EDMUND, REGAN, GONERIL, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.

If you have victory, let the trumpet sound

For him that brought it; wretched though I seem,

I can produce a champion, that will prove

What is avouched there: If you miscarry,

Your business of the world hath so an end,

And machination ceases.¹² Fortune love you!

Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.

Edg.

I was forbid it.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,

And I'll appear again. [Exit.]

Alb. Why, fare thee well; I will o'erlook thy paper.

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view, draw up your powers,

Here is the guess of their true strength and forces

By diligent discovery;¹³—but your haste

Is now urg'd on you.

Alb.

We will greet the time.¹⁴ [Exit.] king to assert his former title.¹⁵ Thus in the ancient

Interlude of Hycke Scornor:—

'Alas, that I had not one to bolde me.'

Again in Arthur Hull's translation of the fourth Iliad,

4to. 1581:—

'And Pallas bolde the Greeks.' &c.

'To make bolde, to encourage, animum addere.'—

Baret.

7 The quartos have it:—

'For these domestic doore particulars.'

The folio reads in the subsequent line:

'Are not the question here.'

8 This speech is wanting in the folio.

9 i. e. all designs against your life will have an end,

These words are not in the quartos.

10 i. e. the conjecture, or what we can gather by diligent espial, of their strength. So in King Henry IV.

Part I. Act iv. Sc. 1:—

'—send discoverers forth

To know the number of our enemies'

The passage has only been thought obscure for want of a right understanding of the word discover, which neither Malone nor Steevens seems to have understood.

11 i. e. be ready to meet the occasion.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love;

Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Ae of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both! one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive; To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my side,¹
Her husband being alive. Now, then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia,—
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon: for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate.² [Exit.]

SCENE II. *A Field between the two Camps.—
Alarum within. Enter, with Drum, and Colours,
LEAR, CORDELIA, and their Forces; and exeunt.
Enter EDMOND and GLOSTER.*³

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:
If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you, sir!
[Exit EDMOND.]

Alarums; afterwards a Retreat. Re-enter EDMOND.

Edg. Away, old man, give me thy hand, away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en:
Give me thy hand, come on.

Glo. No further, sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure

Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Ripeness is all:⁴ Come on.

Glo. And that's true too.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The British Camp near Dover. Enter, in Conquest, with Drum and Colours, EDMOND; LEAR and CORDELIA, as Prisoners; Officers, Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away; good guard;
Until their greater pleasure first be known
That are to censure⁵ them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who, with the best meaning, have incur'd the worst.⁶

For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down;
Myself could else outfrown false fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters, and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage:
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness: So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh

1 Hardly shall I be able to make my side (i.e. my party) good; to maintain the game. Stevens has shown that it was a phrase commonly used at cards. So in the Paston Letters, vol. iv. p. 153:—'Heydon's son hath borne out the side stoutly here,' &c.

2 Such is my determination concerning Lear; as for my state, it requires now not deliberation, but defence and support.

3 Those who are curious to know how far Shakespeare was indebted to the Arcadia, will find a chapter entitled 'The Pitifull State and Storie of the Paphlagonian unkinde King, and his kinde Sonne; first related by the Sonne, then by the blinde Father,' at p. 141 of the edition of 1590, 4to.

4 I.e. to be ready, prepared, is all. So in Hamlet:—'If it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all.'
5 I.e. to pass sentence or judgment on them. So in Othello:—'Remains the censure of this hellish villain.'

6 That is 'the worst that fortune can inflict.'

7 As if we were angels, endowed with the power of prying into the original motives of action and the mysteries of conduct.

8 Packs and sects are combinations and parties.
9 The thought is extremely noble, and expressed in a sublime of imagery that Seneca fell short of on a similar occasion:—'Ecce spectaculum dignum ad quod respiciat intenti operi suo deus; ecce par deo dignum vir fortis cum mala fortuna compositus.'—Warburton.

At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out;—
And take upon us the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies:⁷ And we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects⁸ of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense.⁹ Have I caught
thee?

He, that parts us, shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence, like foxes.¹⁰ Wipe thine eyes;
The goujeers shall devour them, flesh and fell,¹¹
Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see them starve first.

Come. [Exeunt LEAR and CORDELIA, guarded.]

Edm. Come hither, captain; hark.
Take thou this note:¹² [Giving a Paper] go, follow them to prison:

One step I have advanc'd thee; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes: Know thou this,—that men
Are as the time is: to be tender-minded
Does not become a sword:—Thy great employment
Will not bear question:¹³ either say, thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other means.

Off. I'll do't, my lord.

Edm. About it; and write happy, when thou hast done.

Mark,—I say instantly; and carry it so,
As I have set it down.

Off. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If it be man's work, I will do it. [Exit Officer.]

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, Officers, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain,

And fortune led you well: You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife:
We do require them of you; so to use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention, and appointed guard;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances¹⁴ in our eyes Which do command them. With him I sent the queen;

My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, to appear
Where you shall hold your session. [At this time

10 Alluding to the old practice of smoking foxes out of their holes. So in Harrington's translation of Ariosto, b. xxvii. stan. 17:—

'E'en as a fox whom smoke and fire doth fright,
So as he dare not in the ground remaine,
Bolts out, and through the smoke and fire he bieth
Into the tarrier's mouth, and there he dieth.'

11 'The goujeers shall devour them flesh and fell.'
The goujeers, i.e. morbus Gallicus. Gouge, Fr. is a soldier's trull; and as the disease was first dispersed over Europe by the French army, and the women who followed it, the first name it obtained among us was the goujeers, i.e. the disease of the gouges.—Hammer. The expression, however, soon became obscure, its origin not being generally known, and it was at length corrupted to the good year; a very opposite form of expression. In the present instance the quartos, following the common corruption, have the good yeares. Flesh and fell is flesh and skin. Thus in The Speculum Vitæ, MS.:—

'That alle men eal a domesday rise
Oute of their graves in fleshe and felle.'
So in The Dyar's Playe, Chester Mysteries, MS. in the Brit. Museum:—

'I made thee man of flesh and fell.'

12 This was a warrant signed by the Bastard and Goneril, for the execution of Lear and Cordelia, referred to in a subsequent scene by Edmund.

13 I.e. admit of debate.

14 That is the lancemen we have hired by giving them press-money

We sweat and bleed : the friend hath lost his friend :
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness :—
The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a fitter place.*]

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks, our pleasure might have been demanded,
Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers ;
Bore the commission² of my place and person ;
The which immediacy³ may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot :
In his own grace⁴ he doth exalt himself,
More than in your advancement.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeers the best.

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband you.⁵

Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla !
That eye, that told you so, look'd but a-squint.⁶

Reg. Lady, I am not well ; else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach.—General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony ;
Dispose of them, of me ; the walls are thine :
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him ?

Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will.⁷

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.
Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine.⁸ [To EDMUND.]

Alb. Stay yet ; hear reason : Edmund, I arrest
thee

On capital treason ; and, in thine, attain't⁹
This gilded serpent : [Pointing to GON.]—for your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife ;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord ;
And I, her husband, contradict your baus.
If you will marry, make your love to me,
My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude !

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Gloucester :—Let the trumpet
sound :

If none appear to prove upon thy person,
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge ; [Throwing down a Glove.]

I'll prove it on thy heart,
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick !

Gon. If not, I'll ne'er trust poison. [Aside.]

Edm. There's my exchange : [Throwing down a Glove] what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies :

Call by thy trumpet : he that dares approach,
On him, on you, (who not ?) I will maintain
My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho !

Edm.

A herald, ho, a herald !

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue ;¹¹ for thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

Reg. This sickness grows upon me

Enter a Herald.

Alb. She is not well ; convey her to my tent.

[Exit REGAN, led.]

Come hither, herald.—Let the trumpet sound,—
And read out this.

Off. Sound, trumpet.

[A Trumpet sounds.]

Herald reads.

If any man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet : He is bold in his defence.

Edm. Sound.

[1 Trumpet.]

Her. Again.

[2 Trumpet.]

Her. Again.

[3 Trumpet.]

[Trumpet answers within]

Enter EDGAR, armed, preceded by a Trumpet

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears Upon this call o' the trumpet.¹²

Her.

What are you ?

Your name, your quality ? and why you answer
This present summons ?

Edg.

Know, my name is lost ;

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn, and canker-bit :
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope withal.

Alb.

Which is that adversary ?

Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloster ?

Edm. Himself ;—What say'st thou to him ?

Edg.

Draw thy sword ;

That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice : here is mine.
Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession :¹³ I protest,—
Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,
Despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour, and thy heart,—thou art a traitor :
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father ;
Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince ;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust beneath thy feet,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou, No,
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent
To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak,
Thou liest.

Edm.

In wisdom, I should ask thy name ;¹⁴

But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
And that thy tongue some 'say'¹⁵ of breeding breathes,
What safe and nicely¹⁶ I might well delay

* i. e. the determination of what shall be done with Cordelia, and her father, should be reserved for greater privacy.

² Commission for authority.

³ Immediacy is, I think, close and immediate connexion with me, and direct authority from me. Immediate is the reading of the quartos.

⁴ Grace here means noble deportment. The folio has addition instead of advancement in the next line.

⁵ 'If he were married to you, you could not say more than this, nor could he enjoy greater power.' In the folio this line is given to Albany.

⁶ Alluding to the proverb, 'Love being jealous makes a good eye look a-squint.' So Milton:—

'And gladly banish squint suspicion.' Comus.

⁷ A metaphor taken from the camp, and signifying to surrender at discretion. This line is not in the quartos.

⁸ 'To obstruct their union lies not in your good pleasure, your veto will avail nothing.'

⁹ It appears from this speech that Regan did not know that Albany had discharged her forces. This line is given to Edmund in the quartos.

¹⁰ The folio reads 'thy arrest.'

¹¹ i. e. valour ; a Roman sense of the word. Thus Raleigh:—'The conquest of Palestine with singular virtue they performed.'

¹² This is according to the ceremonials of the trial by combat in cases criminal. 'The appellant and his procurator first come to the gate. The constable and marshal demand by voice of herald, what he is, and why he comes so arrayed.'—Selden's Duello.

¹³ 'Here I draw my sword. Behold, it is the privilege or right of my profession to draw it against a traitor.' It is the right of bringing the charge, and maintaining it with his sword, which Edgar calls the privilege of his profession.

¹⁴ Because, if his adversary was not of equal rank, Edmund might have declined the combat. Goneril afterwards says:—

'By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer An unknown opposite.'

¹⁵ Say, or assay, is a sample, a taste. So in the preface to Maurice Kyffin's translation of the Andria of Terence, 1338:—'Some other like places I could recite, but these shall suffice for a say.'

¹⁶ 'What safe and nicely I might well delay.' This seems to mean 'What I might safely well delay,

By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn:
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart;
Which, (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,)
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest forever.¹—Trumpets, speak.

[Alarums. They fight, EDMUND falls.]

Alb. O, save him, save him!²

Gon. This is mere practice, Gloucester:
By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer
An unknown opposite; thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozen'd and beguil'd.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it:—Hold, sir:—
Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil:
No tearing, lady; I perceive you know it.

[Gives the Letter to EDMUND.]

Gon. Say, if I do; the laws are mine, not thine:
Who shall arraign me for't?

Alb. Most monstrous!
Know'st thou this paper?

Gon. Ask me not what I know.

[Exit GONERIL.]

Alb. Go after her: she's desperate; govern her.
[To an Officer, who goes out.]

Edm. What you have charg'd me with, that have
I done;

And much more: the time will bring it out;
'Tis past, and so am I: But what art thou,
That hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble,
I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity.⁴
I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund;
If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us:⁵
The dark and vicious place where thee he got,
Cost him his eyes.

Edm. Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true;
The wheel is come full circle; I am here.

Alb. Methought, thy very gait did prophesy
A royal nobleness:—I must embrace thee;
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee, or thy father.

Edg. Worthy prince, I know't.
Alb. Where have you hid yourself?

How have you known the miseries of your father?
Edg. By nursing them, my lord.—List a brief tale:—

And, when 'tis told, O, that my heart would burst!
The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near, (O, our lives' sweetness!
That we the pain of death would hourly die,⁶
Rather than die at once!) taught me to shift
Into a madman's rags; to assume a semblance
That very dogs disdain'd: and in this habit

if I acted punctiliously.⁷ This line is omitted in the quartos, but without it the subsequent line is nonsense.

1 To that place where they shall rest for ever: i. e.
thy heart.

2 Albany desires that Edmund's life may be spared at present, only to obtain his confession, and to convict him openly by his own letter.

3 'Knowest thou these letters?' says Lear to Regan, in the old anonymous play, when he shows her both her own and her sister's letters, which were written to procure his death, upon which she snatches the letters and tears them.

4 Shakespeare gives his heathens the sentiments and practices of Christianity. In Hamlet there is the same solemn act of final reconciliation, but with exact propriety, for the personages are Christians:—

'Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet.'

5 The folio reads 'to plague us.'

6 'To die hourly the pains of death,' is a periphrasis for 'to suffer hourly the pains of death.' The quartos read:—

'That with the pain of death would hourly die.'

7 So in Pericles:—

'Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels

Which Pericles hath lost.'

8 The lines within crochets are not in the folio.

9 Of this difficult passage, which is probably corrupt,
Boswell gives the following explanation:—'This would

Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious stones new lost; became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair;
Never, (O, fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,
Until, some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and, from first to last,
Told him my pilgrimage; But his flaw'd heart,
(Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good: but speak you on;
You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

9 [Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow, but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.⁹

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society; but then finding
Who 'twas that so endur'd, with his strong arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven: threw him¹⁰ on my father;
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd: which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack: Twice then the trumpet sounded,
And there I left him tranç'd.

Alb. But who was this?

Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.]

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody Knife.

Gent. Help! help! O, help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came even from the heart of—

Alb. Who, man? speak.

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady: and her sister
By her is poison'd; she hath confess'd it.¹¹

Edm. I was contract'd to them both; all three
Now marry in an instant.

Alb. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead!—
This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble,

Touches us not with pity.¹² [Exit Gentleman.]

Enter KENT.

Edg. Here comes Kent, sir.

Alb. O! it is he.

have seem'd a period to such as love not sorrow, but—another, i. e. but I must add another, i. e. another period, another kind of conclusion to my story, such as will increase the horrors of what has been already told.⁹ It will be necessary, if we admit this interpretation, to point the passage thus:—

'but another:—

(To amplify too much, would make much more,

And top extremity, &c.

Whilst I was big, &c.
Malone's explanation is:—'This would have seem'd the utmost completion of woe, to such as do not delight in sorrow, but another, of a different disposition, to amplify misery "would give more strength to that which hath too much." Referring to the Bastard's desiring to hear more, and to Albany's thinking that enough had been said.

10 The quartos read 'threw me on my father.'— Steevens thus defends the present reading:—'There is a tragic propriety in Kent's throwing himself on the body of a deceased friend; but this propriety is lost in the act of clumsily tumbling a son over the lifeless remains of his father.'

11 Thus the quarto. The folio reads 'she confesses it.'
12 'If Shakespeare had studied Aristotle all his life, he would not, perhaps, have been able to mark with more precision the distinct operations of terror and pity.'
Tyrwhitt.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my king and master aye good night;
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot!—
Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cordelia?—

See'st thou this object, Kent?

[The Bodies of GONERIL and REGAN are brought in.]

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd:
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so.—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life:—Some good I mean to do,
Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,—
Be brief in it,—to the castle, for my writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:—
Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O, run—

Edg. To whom, my lord?—Who has the office?
send

Thy token of reprieve.

Edm. Well thought on; take my sword,
Give it the captain.

Alb. Haste thee, for thy life. [Exit EDMUND.]

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she fordid herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. [EDMUND is borne off.]

Enter LEAR, with CORDELIA dead in his Arms;²
EDGAR, Officer,³ and others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O, you are men of stones;

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack:—O, she is gone for ever!—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth:—Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?³

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!⁴

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,

1 To fordo signifies to destroy. It is used again in Hamlet, Act v. :—

“—did, with desperate hand,
Fordo its own life.”

2 The old historians say that Cordelia retired with victory from the battle, which she conducted in her father's cause, and thereby replaced him on the throne: but in a subsequent one fought against her, (after the death of the old king,) by the sons of Regan and Goneril, she was taken, and died miserably in prison (Geoffrey, of Monmouth, the original relater of the story, says that she killed herself.) The dramatic writers of Shakespeare's age suffered as small a number of their heroes and heroines to escape as possible; nor could the filial piety of this lady, any more than the innocence of Ophelia, prevail on the poet to extend her life beyond her misfortunes.—Steevens.

3 Kent, in contemplating the unexampled scene of exquisite affection which was then before him, and the unnatural attempt of Goneril and Regan against their father's life, recollects those passages of St. Mark's Gospel in which Christ foretells to his disciples the end of the world, and hence his question, ‘Is this the promised end of all things, which has been foretold to us?’ To which Edgar adds, or only a representation or resemblance of that horror? So Macbeth, when he calls upon Banquo, Malcolm, &c. to view Duncan murdered, says:—

“—up, up, and see

The great doom's image! Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,

To countenance this horror.”

There is an allusion to the same passage of Scripture in a speech of Gloucester in the second scene of the first act.—Mason.

4 To cease, is to die. Albany is looking with attention on the pains employed by Lear to recover his child, and knows to what miseries he must survive, when he finds them to be ineffectual. Having these images present to his eyes and imagination, he cries out, ‘Rather fall, and cease to be at once, than continue in existence only to be wretched.’

Kent. O, my good master! [Knocking.]

Lear. ‘Pr'ythee, away.

Edg. ‘Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all! I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever! Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha!

What is't thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft, Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in woman:— I kill'd the slave that was a-hanging thee.

Off. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not, fellow?

I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion I would have made them skip: I am old now. And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are you?

Mine eyes are none o' the best:—I'll tell you straight. Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and bated, One of them we behold.⁶

Lear. This is a dull sight: Are you not Kent?

Kent. The same;

Your servant Kent: Where is your servant Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;

He'll strike, and quickly too:—He's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good lord, I am the very man;

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. That from your first difference and decay,

Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly.—

Your eldest daughters have fore-doom'd^d themselves,

And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he sees; and vain it is

That we present us to him.

Edg. Very bootless.

Enter an Officer.

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle here.—

You lords, and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay⁸ may come,

Shall be applied: for us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power:—You, to your rights;

[To EDGAR and KENT.]

With boot, and such addition as your honours

tion on the pains employed by Lear to recover his child, and knows to what miseries he must survive, when he finds them to be ineffectual. Having these images present to his eyes and imagination, he cries out, ‘Rather fall, and cease to be at once, than continue in existence only to be wretched.’

5 It is difficult for an author who never peruses his first works to avoid repeating some of the same thoughts in his later productions. What Lear has just said has been anticipated by Justice Shallow, in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—‘I have seen the time with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.’ It is again repeated in Othello:—

‘—I have seen the day

That with this little arm and this good sword

I have made my way,’ &c.

6 ‘If Fortune, to display the plenitude of her power, should brag of two persons, one of whom she had highly elevated, and the other she had wofully depressed, we now behold the latter.’ The quarto reads ‘She lov'd or hated,’ which confirms this sense.

7 I think, with Mr. Blakeway, that Lear means his eyesight was bedimmed either by excess of grief, or, as is usual, by the approach of death. So in Baret, ‘Dull eyes, inertes oculi:’—‘To dull the eyesight, hebetare oculos.’ Albany says of Lear below, ‘He knows not what he sees,’ where the folio erroneously reads ‘he says.’

8 Thus the quartos: the folio reads foredone, which is probably right. See note 1, in the preceding column.

9 ‘This great decay’ is Lear, whom Shakespeare poetically calls so; and means the same as if he had said, ‘this piece of decayed royalty,’ ‘this ruined majesty.’ Gloucester calls him in a preceding scene ‘ruin'd piece of nature.’

Have more than merited:—All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings.—O, see, see!

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd? No, no, no, no life:

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? O, thou wilt come no more,

Never, never, never, never, never!—

'Pray you, undo this button: Thank you, sir.—

Do you see this?—Look on her,—look,—her lips,—

Look there, look there!—[He dies.]

Edg. He faints!—My lord, my lord,—

Kent. Break, heart; I prythee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him,

That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

Edg. O, he is gone indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long;
He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence.—Our present business

Is general wo. Friends of my soul, you twain

[To KENT AND EDGAR.]

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;

My master calls, and I must not say, no.

Alb. The weight of this sad time we must obey;

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say;

The oldest hath borne most: we, that are young,

Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exeunt, with a dead March.]

THE tragedy of Lear is deservedly celebrated among the dramas of Shakspeare. There is perhaps no play which keeps the attention so strongly fixed; which so much agitates our passions, and interests our curiosity. The artful involutions of distinct interests, the striking oppositions of contrary characters, the sudden changes of fortune, and the quick succession of events, fill the mind with a perpetual tumult of indignation, pity, and hope. There is no scene which does not contribute to the aggravation of the distress or conduct of the action, and scarce a line which does not conduce to the progress of the scene. So powerful is the current of the poet's imagination, that the mind, which once ventures within it, is hurried irresistibly along.

On the seeming improbability of Lear's conduct, it may be observed, that he is represented according to 1 These lines are addressed to Kent as well as to Edgar, else the word honours would not have been in the plural number. Boot is advantage, increase. By honours is meant, honourable conduct.

2 This is an expression of tenderness for his dead Cordelia, (not his fool, as some have thought,) on whose lips he is still intent, and dies while he is searching there for indications of life. 'Poor fool,' in the age of Shakspeare, was an expression of endearment. So in Twelfth Night:—'Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee.' Again, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—'Alas, poor fool, why do I pity him?' With other instances which will present themselves to the reader's memory. The fool of Lear was long ago forgotten; having filled the space allotted to him in the arrangement of the play, he appears to have been silently withdrawn in the sixth scene of the third act. Besides this, Cordelia was recently hanged; but we know not that the Fool had suffered in the same manner, nor can imagine why he should.—That the thoughts of a father, in the bitterness of all moments, when his favourite child lay dead in his arms, should recur to the antic, who had formerly diverted him, has somewhat in it that cannot be reconciled to the idea of genuine despair and sorrow.—Steevens.

There is an ingenious note by Sir Joshua Reynolds in the variorum Shakspeare, for which I regret I cannot find space, sustaining a contrary opinion; but, as Malone observes, 'Lear from the time of his entrance in this scene to his uttering these words, and from thence to his death, is wholly occupied by the loss of his daughter.—He is now in the agony of death, and surely at such a time, when his heart was just breaking, it would be highly unnatural that he should think of his fool. He had just seen his daughter hanged, having unfortunately been admitted too late to preserve her life, though time enough to punish the perpetrator of the act.'

histories at that time vulgarly received as true. And, perhaps, if we turn our thoughts upon the barbarity and ignorance of the age to which this story is referred, it will appear not so unlikely as while we estimate Lear's manners by our own. Such preference of one daughter to another, or resignation of dominion on such conditions, would be yet credible, if told of a petty prince of Guinea or Madagascar. Shakspeare, indeed, by the mention of his earls and dukes, has given us the idea of times more civilized, and of life regulated by softer manners; and the truth is, that though he so nicely discriminates, and so minutely describes the characters of men, he commonly neglects and confounds the characters of ages, by mingling customs ancient and modern, English and foreign.

My learned friend, Mr. Warton, who has, in The Adventurer, very minutely criticised this play, remarks, that the instances of cruelty are too savage and shocking, and that the intervention of Edmund destroys the simplicity of the story. These objections may, I think, be answered by repeating that the cruelty of the daughters is an historical fact, to which the poet has added little, having only drawn it into a series of dialogue and action. But I am not able to apologize with equal plausibility for the extrusion of Gloucester's eyes, which seems an act too horrid to be endured in dramatic exhibition, and such as must always compel the mind to relieve its distress by incredulity. Yet let it be remembered that our author well knew what would please the audience for which he wrote.

The injury done by Edmund to the simplicity of the action is abundantly recompensed by the addition of variety, by the art with which he is made to co-operate with the chief design, and the opportunity which he gives the poet of combining perfidy with perfidy, and connecting the wicked son with the wicked daughters, to impress this important moral, that villainy is never at a stop, that crimes lead to crimes, and at last terminate in ruin.

But though this moral be incidentally enforced, Shakspeare has suffered the virtue of Cordelia to perish in a just cause, contrary to the natural ideas of justice, to the hope of the reader, and, what is yet more strange, to the faith of chronicles. Yet this conduct is justified by The Spectator, who blames Tate for giving Cordelia success and happiness in his alteration, and declares, that in his opinion the tragedy has lost half its beauty. Dennis has remarked, whether justly or not, that, to secure the favourable reception of Cato, the town was poisoned with much false and abominable criticism, and that endeavours had been used to discredit and decry poetical justice. A play in which the wicked prosper, and the virtuous miscarry, may doubtless be good, because it is a just representation of the common events of human life: but since all reasonable beings naturally love justice, I cannot easily be persuaded that the observation of justice makes a play worse: or that, if other excellencies are equal, the audience will not always rise better pleased from the final triumph of persecuted virtue.

In the present case the public has decided.* Cordelia, from the time of Tate has always retired with victory and felicity. And, if my sensations could add any thing to the general suffrage, I might relate, I was many years ago so shocked by Cordelia's death, that I know not whether I ever endured to read again the last scenes of the play till I undertook to revise them as an editor.

There is another controversy among the critics concerning this play. It is disputed whether the predominant image in Lear's disordered mind be the loss of his kingdom or the cruelty of his daughters. Mr. Murphy, a very judicious critic, has evinced by induction of particular passages, that the cruelty of his daughters is the primary source of his distress, and that the loss of royalty affects him only as a secondary and subordinate evil. He observes, with great justness, that Lear would move our compassion but little, did we not rather consider the injured father than the degraded king.

* Dr. Johnson should rather have said that the managers of the theatres royal have decided, and the public has been obliged to acquiesce in their decision. The altered play has the upper gallery on its side; the original drama was patronised by Addison:—

Victrix causa Diis placuit sed victa Catoni.†

Steevens.

The story of this play, except the episode of Edmund, which is derived, I think, from Sidney, is taken originally from Geoffrey of Monmouth, whom Holinshed generally copied; but perhaps immediately from an old historical ballad. My reason for believing that the play was posterior to the ballad, rather than the ballad to the play, is, that the ballad has nothing of Shakespeare's nocturnal tempest, which is too striking to have been omitted, and that it follows the chronicle: it has the rudiments of the play, but none of its amplifications: it first hinted Lear's madness, but did not array it in circumstances. The writer of the ballad added something to the history, which is a proof that he would have added more, if more had occurred to his mind, and more must have occurred if he had seen Shakespeare. JOHNSON

ROMEO AND JULIET.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE original relater of this story appears to have been Luigi da Porto, a gentleman of Vicenza, who died in 1529. His novel seems not to have been printed till some years after his death; being first published at Venice, in 1533, under the title of 'La Giuletta': there is, however, a dateless copy by the same printer. In the dedication to Madonna Lucina Savorgana, he tells her that the story was related to him by one of his archers, named Peregrino, a native of Verona, while serving in Friuli, to beguile the solitary road that leads from Gradisca to Udine.

Girolamo della Corte, in his History of Verona, relates it circumstantially as a true event, occurring in 1303;* but Maffei does not give him the highest credit as an historian: he carries his history down to the year 1580, and probably adopted the novel to grace his book. The earlier annals of Verona, and above all, Torello Sarayna, who published, in 1542, 'Le Histoires e Fatti de Veronesi nell' Tempi d'il Popolo e Signori Scalligeri,' are entirely silent upon the subject, though some other domestic tragedies grace their narrations.

As to the origin of this interesting story, Mr. Douce has observed that its material incidents are to be found in the Ephesiacs of Xenophon of Ephesus, a Greek romance of the middle ages; he admits, indeed, that this work was not published nor translated in the time of Luigi da Porto, but suggests that he might have seen a copy of the original in manuscript. Mr. Dunlop, in his History of Fiction, has traced it to the thirty-second novel of Massuccio Salernitano, whose 'Novellino,' a collection of tales, was first printed in 1476. The hero of Massuccio is named Mariotto di Giannozza, and his catastrophe is different; yet there are sufficient points of resemblance between the two narratives. Mr. Boswell observes, that 'we may perhaps carry the fiction back to a much greater antiquity, and doubt whether, after all, it is not the tale of Pyramus and Thisbe, enlarged and varied by the luxuriant imagination of the novelist.'

The story is also to be found in the second volume of the Novels of Bandello, (Novel ix.) and it is remarkable that he says it was related to him, when at the baths of Caldera, by the Captain Alexander Peregrino, a native of Verona; we may presume the same person from whom Da Porto received it: unless this appropriation is to be considered supposititious. The story also exists in Italian verse; and I had once a glance of a copy of it in that form, but neglected to note the title or date, and had not time for a more particular examination. It was translated from the Italian of Bandello into French, by Pierre Boistean, who varies from his original in many particulars; and, from the French, Painter gave a translation in the second volume of his Palace of Pleasure, 1567, which he entitled Rhomeo and Julietta. From Boistean's novel the same story was, in 1562, formed into an English poem, with considerable alterations and large additions, by Arthur Brooke; this poem the curious reader will find reprinted entire in the variorum editions of Shakespeare: it was originally printed by Richard Tottel, with the following title: 'The Tragical Hystorye of Romeus and Juliet, written first in Italian, by Bandell; and nowe in English, by Ar. Br.' Upon this piece Malone has shown, by unequivocal testimony, that the play was formed: numerous circumstances are introduced from the poem, which the novelist would not have supplied; and even the identity of expression, which not unfrequently occurs, is sufficient to settle the question. Steevens, without expressly controverting the fact, endeavoured to throw a doubt upon it by his repeated quotations from the Palace of Pleasure. In two passages, it is true, he has quoted Painter, where Brooke is silent; but very little weight belongs to either of them. In one there is very little resemblance; and in the other the circumstance might be inferred from the poem, though not exactly specified. The poem of Arthur Brooke was republished in 1587, with the title thus amplified:—'Containing a rare Example of true Constance: with the subtile Counsellis and Practices of an old Fryer, and their ill Event.'

In the preface to Arthur Brooke's poem there is a very curious passage, in which he says, 'I saw the same argument lately set forth on stage with more commendation than I can looke for, (being there much better set forth then I have or can doe.)' He has not, however, stated in what country this play was represented: the rude state of our drama, prior to 1562, renders it improbable that it was in England. 'Yet, (says Mr. Boswell,) I cannot but be of opinion that Romeo and Juliet may be added to the list, already numerous, of plays in which our great poet has had a dramatic precursor, and that some slight remains of the old play are still to be traced in the earliest quarto.'

'The story has at all times been eminently popular in all parts of Europe. A Spanish play was formed on it by Lope de Vega, entitled Los Castelvies y Montes; and another in the same language, by Don Francisco de Roxas, under the name of Los Vandos de Verona. In Italy, as may well be supposed, it has not been neglected. The modern productions on this subject are too numerous to be specified; but, as early as 1573, Luigi Groto produced a drama upon the subject, called Huariana, of which an analysis may be found in Mr. Walker's Memoir on Italian Tragedy. Groto has stated in his prologue, that the story is drawn from the ancient history of Adria, his native place; so that Verona is not the only place that has appropriated this interesting fable.

This has been generally considered one of Shakespeare's earliest plays;† and Schlegel has eloquently said, that 'it shines with the colours of the dawn of morning, but a dawn whose purple clouds already announce the thunder of a sultry day.' 'Romeo and Juliet (says the same admirable critic) is a picture of love and its pitiable fate, in a world whose atmosphere is too rough for this tenderest blossom of human life. Two beings, created for each other, feel mutual love at first glance; every consideration disappears before the irresistible influence of living in one another; they join themselves secretly, under circumstances hostile in the

* Captain Breval, in his Travels, tells us that he was shown at Verona what was called the tomb of these unhappy lovers; and that, on a strict inquiry into the histories of Verona, he found that Shakespeare had varied very little from the truth, either in the names, characters, or other circumstances of this play. The fact seems to be, that the invention of the novelist has been adopted into the popular history of the city, just as Shakespeare's historical dramas furnish numbers with their notions of the events to which they relate.

† Malone thinks that the foundation of the play might be laid in 1591, and finished in 1596. Mr. George Chalmers places the date of its composition in the spring of 1592. And Dr. Drake, with greater probability, ascribes it to 1593. There are four early quarto editions in 1597, 1599, 1609, and one without a date. The first edition is less ample than those which succeed. Shakespeare appears to have revised the play; but in the succeeding impressions no fresh incidents are introduced, the alterations are merely additions to the length of particular speeches and scenes. The principal variations are pointed out in the notes.

highest degree to their union, relying merely on the protection of an invisible power. By unfriendly events following blow upon blow, their heroic constancy is exposed to all manner of trials, till forcibly separated from each other, by a voluntary death they are united in the grave to meet again in another world. All this is to be found in the beautiful story which Shakspeare has not invented, and which, however simply told, will always excite a tender sympathy: but it was reserved for Shakspeare to unite purity of heart and the glow of imagination, sweetness and dignity of manners and passionate violence, in one ideal picture. By the manner in which he has handled it, it has become a glorious song of praise on that inexpressible feeling which ennobles the soul, and gives to it its highest sublimity, and which elevates even the senses themselves into soul, and at the same time is a melancholy elegy on its frailty from its own nature and external circumstances; at once the deification and the burial of love. It appears here like a heavenly spark, that, descending to the earth, is converted into a flash of lightning, by which mortal creatures are almost in the same moment set on fire and consumed. Whatever is most intoxicating in the odour of a southern spring, languishing in the song of the nightingale, or voluptuous in the first opening of the rose, is to be found in this poem. But even more rapidly than the earliest blossoms of youth and beauty decay, it hurries on from the first timidly-bold declaration of love and modest return, to the most unlimited passion, to an irrevocable union; then, amidst alternating storms of rapture and despair, to the death of the two lovers, who still appear enviable as their love survives them, and as by their death they have obtained a triumph over every separating power. The sweetest and the bitterest, love and hatred, festivity and dark forebodings, tender embraces and sepulchres, the fulness of life and self-annihilation, are all here brought close to each other; and all these contrasts are so blended in the harmonious and wonderful work into a unity of impression, that the echo which the whole leaves behind in the mind resembles a single but endless sigh.

‘The excellent dramatic arrangement, the significance of each character in its place, the judicious selection of all the circumstances, even the most minute,’ have been pointed out by Schlegel in a dissertation referred to in a note at the end of the play; in which he remarks, that ‘there can be nothing more diffuse, more wearisome, than the rhyming history, which Shakspeare’s genius, “like richest alchemy,” has changed to beauty and to worthiness.’ Nothing but the delight of seeing into this wonderful metamorphosis can compensate for the laborious task of reading through more than three thousand six and seven-footed iambs, which, in respect of every thing that amuses, affects, and enraptures us in this play, are as a mere blank leaf.—Here all interest is entirely smothered under the coarse, heavy pretensions of an elaborate exposition. How much was to be cleared away, before life could be breathed into the shapeless mass! In many parts what is here given bears the same relation to what Shakspeare has made out of it, which any common description of a thing bears to the thing itself. Thus out of the following hint—

‘A courtier, that eche-where was highly had in pryce,
For he was courteous of his speche and pleasant of devise:

Even as a lyon would among the lambes be bolde,
Such was among the bashfull maydes Mercutio to be-holde;’

and the addition that the said Mercutio had from his swathing-bands constantly had cold hands,—has arisen a splendid character decked out with the utmost profusion of wit. Not to mention a number of nicer deviations, we find also some important incidents from the invention; for instance, the meeting and the combat between Paris and Romeo at Juliet’s grave.—Shakspeare knew how to transform by enchantment letters into spirit, a workman’s daub into a poetical master piece.

‘Lessing declared Romeo and Juliet to be the only tragedy, that he knew, which love himself had assisted to compose. I know not (says Schlegel) how to end more gracefully than with these simple words, wherein so much lies:—One may call this poem an harmonious miracle, whose component parts that heavenly power alone could so melt together. It is at the same time enchantingly sweet and sorrowful, pure and glowing, gentle and impetuous, full of elegiac softness, and tragically overpowering.’

PROLOGUE.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge, break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross’d lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur’d piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents’ strife.

The fearful passage of their death-mark’d love,
And the continuance of their parents’ rage,
Which, but their children’s end, nought could remove,
Is now the two hours’ traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I. A public Place. Enter SAMPSON and GREGORY, armed with Swords and Bucklers.

Sampson.

GREGORY, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.¹

Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.

Sam. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.

Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.

Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.

Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.

Gre. To move, is—to stir; and to be valiant, is—to stand to it: therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou run'st away.

Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand: I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.

Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.

Sam. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall:—therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.

Sam. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.

Gre. The heads of the maids?

Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maid-heads; take it in what sense thou wilt.

Gre. They must take it in sense that feel it.

Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand: and, 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.

Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John.² Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.³

Enter ABRAM and BALTHAZAR.

Sam. My naked weapon is out; quarrel, I will back thee.

Gre. How? turn thy back, and run?

Sam. Fear me not.

Gre. No, marry: I fear thee!

Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.

Gre. I will frown, as I pass by; and let them take it as they list.

Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb⁴ at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.

1 To carry coals is to put up with insults, to submit to any degradation. Anciently, in great families, the scullions, turnspits, and carriers of wood and coals were esteemed the very lowest of menials, the drudges of all the rest. Such attendants upon the royal household, in progresses, were called the black-guard; and hence the origin of that term. Thus in May Day, a Comedy by Geo. Chapman, 1609:—'You must swear by no man's beard but your own; for that may breed a quarrel: above all things, you must carry no coals.' Again, in the same play:—'Now my ancient being of an uncoal-carrying spirit,' &c. And in Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour:—'Here comes one that will carry coals; ergo, will hold my dog.' Again in King Henry V. Act iii. Sc. 2:—'At Calais they stole a fireshovel; I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals.'

2 Poor John is hake, dried and salted.

3 The disregard of concord is in character. It should be observed that the partisans of the Montague family were a token in their hats in order to distinguish them from their enemies the Capulets. Hence throughout this play they are known at a distance. Gascogne adverts to this circumstance in a Masque written for Viscount Montacute, in 1575:—

'And for a further proofe, he shewed in his hat

Thy token, which the Montacutes did beare always, for that

They covet to be knowne from Capels, where they pass

For ancient grutch whych long ago tweene these two houses was.'

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Sam. Is the law on our side, if I say—ay?

Gre. No.

Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir; but I bite my thumb, sir.

Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?

Abr. Quarrel, sir? no, sir.

Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you: I serve as good a man as you.

Abr. No better.

Sam. Well, sir.

Enter BENVOLIO, at a distance.

Gre. Say—better; here comes one of my master's kinsmen.

Sam. Yes, better, sir.

Abr. You lie.

Sam. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy swashing⁵ blow. [They fight.]

Ben. Part, fools; put up your swords; you know not what you do. [Beats down their Swords.]

Enter TYBALT.

Tyb. What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?

Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death.

Ben. I do but keep the peace; put up thy sword, Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word,

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee;

Have at thee, coward. [They fight.]

Enter several Partisans of both Houses, who join the fray; then enter Citizens, with Clubs.

1 Cit. Clubs, bills, and partizans! strike! beat them down!

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter CAPULET, in his Gown; and LADY CAPULET.

Cap. What noise is this?—Give me my long sword,⁶ ho! [a sword?]

La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch!—Why call you for Cap. My sword, I say!—Old Montague is come, And flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter MONTAGUE and LADY MONTAGUE.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet,—Hold me not, let me go.

La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel,—
Will they not hear!—what ho! you men, you beasts,—

That quench the fire of your pernicious rage
With purple fountains issuing from your veins,

4 This mode of insult, in order to begin a quarrel, seems to have been common in Shakspeare's time. Decker, in his Dead Term, 1608, describing the various groups that daily frequented St. Paul's Church, says, 'What swearing is there, what shouldering, what justling, what jeering, what biting of thumbs, to beget quarrels!' And Lodge, in his Wits Miserie, 1586:—'Behold, next I see Contempt marching forth, giving me the fico with his thumbe in his mouthe.' The mode in which this contemptuous action was performed is thus described by Cotgrave, in a passage which has escaped the industry of all the commentators:—'Faire la nique: to mocke by nodding or lifting up of the chinne; or more properly, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumbe nail into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knocke.' So in Randolph's Muses' Looking Glass:—

'Dogs and pistols!
To bite his thumb at me!

Wear I a sword

To see men bite their thumbs?'

5 Gregory is a servant of the Capulets: he must therefore mean Tybalt, who enters immediately after Benvolio.

6 i. e. swaggering or dashing.

7 The long sword was the weapon used in active warfare; a lighter, shorter, and less desperate weapon was worn for ornament, to which we have other allusions.

'No sword worn, but one to dance with.'

On pain of torture, from those bloody hands
Throw your mistemper'd¹ weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your moved prince.—
Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word,
By thee, old Capulet and Montague,
Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets;
And made Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their grave beśeeming ornaments,
To wield old partisans, in hands as old,
Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate:
If ever you disturb our streets again,
Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time, all the rest depart away:
You, Capulet, shall go along with me;
And Montague, come you this afternoon,
To know our further pleasure in this case,
To old Free-town,² our common judgment-place.
Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

[Exeunt Prince, and Attendants; CAPULET, LA. CAP. TYBALT, Citizens and Servants.]

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroad?
Speak, nephew, were you by, when it began?

Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary,
And yours, close fighting ere I did approach:
I drew to part them; in the instant came
The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd;
Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,
He swung about his head, and cut the winds,
Who, nothing hurt withal, hiss'd him in scorn:
While we were interchanging thrusts and blows,
Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O, where is Romeo?—saw you him to-day?

Right glad I am, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the worshipp'd sun
Peer'd forth the golden window of the east,³
A troubled mind drove me to walk abroad;
Where,—underneath the grove of sycamore,
That westward rooteth from the city's side,—
So early walking did I see your son:
Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood:
I, measuring his affections by my own,—
That most are busied when they are most alone,— Pursu'd my humour, not pursuing his,
And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me.

Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen,
With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew,
Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs:
But all so soon as the all-cheering sun
Should in the furthest east begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed,
Away from light steals home my heavy son,
And private in his chamber pens himself;
Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out,
And makes himself an artificial night:
Black and portentous must this humour prove,
Unless good counsel may the cause remove.

1 i. e. angry weapons. So in King John:—

'This inundation of mistemper'd humour,' &c.

2 The poet found the name of this place in Brooke's Tragicall History of Romeus and Juliet, 1562. It is there said to be the castle of the Capulets.

3 The same thought occurs in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10:—

'Early before the morn with cremosin ray

The windowes of bright heaven opened had,

Through which into the world the dawning day

Might looke,' &c.

Again in Summa Totalls, or All in All, 4to. 1607:—

'Now heaven's bright eye (awake by Vesper's Shrine)

Peepes through the purple windowes of the East.'

4 The old copy reads:—

'Or dedicate his beauty to the same.'

The emendation is by Theobald; who states, with great plausibility, that sunne might easily be mistaken for same. Malone observes, that Shakspeare has evidently imitated the Rosamond of Daniel in the last act of this play, and in this passage may have remembered the following lines in one of the Sonnets of the same writer, who was then extremely popular:—

'And whilst thou spread'st into the rising sunne

The fairest flower that ever saw the light,

Now joy thy time before thy sweet be done.'

Ben. My noble uncle, do you know the cause?

Mon. I neither know it, nor can learn of him.

Ben. Have you importun'd him by any means?

Mon. Both by myself, and many other friends:

But he, his own affections' counsellor,

Is to himself—I will not say, how true—

But to himself so secret and so close,

So far from sounding and discovery,

As is the bud bit with an envious worm,

Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,

Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.⁴

Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow,

We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter ROMEO, at a distance.

Ben. See, where he comes; So please you, step aside;

I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.

Mon. I would, thou wert so happy by thy stay,

To hear true shrift.—Come, madam, let's away.

[Exeunt MONTAGUE and Lady.]

Ben. Good morrow, cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new struck nine.

Rom. Ah me! sad hours seem long.

Was that my father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was:—What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?

Rom. Not having that, which having makes them short.

Ben. In love?

Rom. Out—

Ben. Of love?

Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in love.

Ben. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view,

Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!

Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,

Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will!⁵

Where shall we dine?—O, me!—What fray was here?

Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.

Here's much to do with hate, but more with love:

Why then, O, brawling love! O, loving hate!⁶

O, any thing, of nothing first create!

O, heavy lightness! serious vanity!

Misshapen chaos of well seeming forms!

Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health!

Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!—

This love feel I, that feel no love in this.

Dost thou not laugh?

Ben. No, coz, I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good heart's oppression.

Rom. Why, such is love's transgression.—

Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast;

Which thou wilt propagate, to have it prest

With more of thine: this love, that thou hast shown,

Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;

Being urg'd,⁷ a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;

These lines add great support to Theobald's emendation. There are few passages in the poet where so great an improvement of language is obtained by so slight a deviation from the text of the old copy.

5 i. e. should blindly and recklessly think he can surmount all obstacles to his will.

6 Every ancient sonneteer characterised Love by contrarities. Watson begins one of his canzonets:—

'Love is a swere delight, and sugred griefe,

A living death, and ever-dying life,' &c.

Turberville makes Reason harangue against it in the same manner:—

'A fierce frost, a flame that frozen is with lee!

A heave burden light to beare! A vertue fraught with vice!' &c.

7 The old copy reads, 'Being urg'd a fire,' &c.—The emendation I have admitted into the text was suggested by Dr. Johnson. To urge the fire is to kindle or excite it. So in Chapman's version of the twenty-first Iliad:—

'And as a cauldron, under put with store of fire,

Bavins of seere-wood urging it,' &c.

So Akenside, in his Hymn to Cheerfulness:—

'Haste, light the tapers, urge the fire,

And bid the joyless day retire.'

Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:

What is it else? a madness most discreet,

A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.

Farewell, my coz. [Going.]

Ben. Soft, I will go along;

An if you leave me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut, I have lost myself; I am not here;

This is not Romeo, he's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadness,¹ whom she is you love.

Rom. What, shall I groan, and tell thee?

Ben. Groan? why, no;

But sadly tell me who.

Rom. Bid a sick man in sadness make his will:

Ah, word ill urg'd to one that is so ill!

In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

Ben. I aim'd so near, when I suppos'd you lov'd.

Rom. A right good marksman!—And she's fair

I love.

Ben. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well, in that hit, you miss: she'll not be hit

With Cupid's arrow, she hath Dian's wit;

And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,²

From love's weak childish bow she lives unharm'd.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,

Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes,

Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:

O, she is rich in beauty; only poor,

That, when she dies, with beauty dies her store.³

Ben. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge waste;

For beauty, starv'd with her severity,

Cuts beauty off from all posterity.

She is too fair, too wise; wisely too fair,

To merit bliss by making me despair:

She hath forsworn to love; and, in that vow,

Do I live dead, that live to tell it now.

Ben. Be rul'd by me, forget to think of her.

Rom. O, teach me how I should forget to think.

Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes;

Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'Tis the way

To call hers, exquisite, in question more:⁴

These happy masks,⁵ that kiss fair ladies' brows,

Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair;

He, that is stricken blind, cannot forget

The precious treasure of his eyesight lost;

Show me a mistress that is passing fair,
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read, who pass'd that passing fair?
Farewell; thou canst not teach me to forget.

Ben. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Street. Enter CAPULET, PARIS, and Servant.

Cap. And Montague is bound as well as I,

In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think,

For men so old as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both;

And pity 'tis, you liv'd at odds so long.

But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?

Cap. By saying o'er what I have said before:

My child is yet a stranger in the world,

She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;

Let two more summers wither in their pride,

Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

Par. Younger than she are happy mothers made.

Cap. And too soon marr'd are those so early made.⁶

The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,

She is the hopeful lady of my earth:⁷

But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,

My will to her consent is but a part;⁸

An she agree, within her scope of choice

Lies my consent and fair according voice.

This night I hold an old accustomed feast,

Whereto I have invited many a guest,

Such as I love; and you, among the store,

One more, most welcome, makes my number more.

At my poor house, look to behold this night

Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven light:

Such comfort, as do lusty young men⁹ feel

When well apparell'd April on the heel

Of limping winter treads, even such delight

Among fresh female buds shall you this night

Inherit¹⁰ at my house; hear all, all see,

And like her most, whose merit most shall be:

Which, on more view of many, mine being one,¹¹

May stand in number, though in reckoning none.

Come, go with me;—Go, sirrah, trudge about

Through fair Verona; find those persons out,

Whose names are written there, [gives a Paper,]

and to them say,

My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.

[Exeunt CAPULET and PARIS.]

Serv. Find them out, whose names are written

1 i. e. tell me gravely, in seriousness.

2 'As this play was written in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, these speeches of Romeo may be regarded as an oblique compliment to her majesty, who was not liable to be displeased at hearing her chastity praised after she was suspected to have lost it, or her beauty commended in the sixty-seventh year of her age, though she never possessed any when young. Her declaration that she would continue unmarried increases the probability of the present supposition.'—Steevens.

3 The meaning appears to be, as Mason gives it, 'She is poor only, because she leaves no part of her store behind her, as with her all beauty will die:—

'For beauty starv'd with her severity

Cuts beauty off from all posterity.'

4 I. e. to call her exquisite beauty more into my mind, and make it more the subject of conversation. Question is used frequently with this sense by Shakespeare.

5 This is probably an allusion to the masks worn by the female spectators of the play: unless we suppose that these means no more than the.

6 The quarto of 1597 reads:—

'And too soon marr'd are those so early married.'

Puttenham, in his Arte of Poesy, 1589, uses this expression, which seems to be proverbial, as an instance of a figure which he calls the Rebound:—

'The maid that soon married is, soon married is.'

The jingle between marr'd and made is likewise frequent among the old writers. So Sidney:—

'Oh! he is marr'd, that is for others made!'

Spenser introduces it very often in his different poems.

7 Fille de terre is the old French phrase for an heiress. Earth is likewise put for lands, i. e. landed estate, in other old plays. But Mason suggests that earth may here mean corporal part, as in a future passage of this play:—

'Can I go forward when my heart is here?

Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.'

So in Shakespeare's 146th Sonnet:—

'Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth.

8 i. e. in comparison to.

9 For 'lusty young men' Johnson would read 'lusty yeomen.' Ritson has clearly shown that young men was used for yeomen in our elder language. And the reader may convince himself by turning to Spelman's Glossary in the words juntores and yeoman.

10 To inherit, in the language of Shakespeare, is to possess.

11 By a perverse adherence to the first quarto copy of 1597, which reads, 'Such amongst view of many,' &c. this passage has been made unintelligible. The subsequent quartos and the folio read, 'Which one [on] more,' &c.; evidently meaning, 'Hear all, see all, and like her most who has the most merit; her, which, after regarding attentively the many, my daughter being one, may stand unique in merit, though she may be reckoned nothing, or held in no estimation. The allusion, as Malone has shown, is to the old proverbial expression, 'One is no number,' thus adverted to in Decker's Honest Whore:—

'—to fall to one

—is to fall to none,

For one no number is.'

And in Shakespeare's 136th Sonnet:—

'Among a number one is reckon'd none,

Theo in the number let me pass untold.'

It will be unnecessary to inform the reader that which is here used for who, a substitution frequent in Shakespeare, as in all the writers of his time. One of the later quartos has corrected the error of the others, and reads as in the present text:—

'Which on more view,' &c

here?¹ It is written—that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard,—and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—In good time.

Enter BENVOLIO and ROMEO.

Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burning,

One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish;

Turn giddy, and be help by backward turning;

One desperate grief cures with another's languish: Take thou some new infection to thy eye,

And the rank poison of the old will die.

Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.²

Ben. For what, I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken skin.

Rom. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is:

Shut up in prison, kept without my food,

Whipp'd and tormented, and—Good-e'en, good fellow.

Serv. God gi' good e'en.—I pray, sir, can you read?

Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.

Serv. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book:

But, I pray, can you read any thing you see?

Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.

Serv. Ye say honestly; Rest you merry!

Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read. [Reads.]

Signior Martino, and his wife and daughters;

County Anselme, and his beauteous sisters; The lady widow of Viruvio; Signior Placentio, and his lovely nieces; Mercutio, and his brother Valentine;

Mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; My fair niece Rosaline; Livia; Signior Valentin, and his cousin Tybalt; Lucio, and the lively Helena.

A fair assembly; [Grips back the Note.] Whither should they come?

Serv. Up.

Rom. Whither?

Serv. To supper; to our house.

Rom. Whose house?

Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.

Serv. Now I'll tell you without asking: My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush

a cup of wine.³ Rest you merry. [Exit.]

Ben. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's

Supps the fair Rosaline, whom thou so lov'st;

With all the admired beauties of Verona.

Go thither; and, with untainted eye,

Compare her face with some that I shall show,

And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye

Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires!

And these,—who, often drown'd, could never die,—

Transparent heretics, be burnt for liars!

One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun

Ne'er saw her match, since first the world began.

Ben. Tut! you saw her fair, none else being by,

Herself pois'd with herself in either eye:

But in those crystal scales, let there be weigh'd
Your lady's love⁴ against some other maid
That I will show you, shining at this feast,
And she shall scant show well, that now shows best.

Rom. I'll go along, no such sight to be shown,
But to rejoice in splendour of mine own. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter
LADY CAPULET and Nurse.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maidenhead,—at twelve year old,

I bade her come.—What, lamb! what, lady-bird!—
God forbid!—where's this girl? what, Juliet!

Enter JULIET.

Jul. How now, who calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here.

What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter;—Nurse, give leave awhile,

We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again,

I have remember'd me, thou shalt hear our counsel.

Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. 'Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour,

La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,

And yet, to my teen⁶ be it spoken, I have but four,—

She is not fourteen: How long is it now.

To Lammastide?

La. Cap. A fortnight, and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,

Come Lammastide at night, shall she be fourteen.

Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—

Were of an age.—Well, Susan is with God;

She was too good for me: But, as I said,

On Lammastide at night shall she be fourteen;

That shall she, marry; I remember it well.

'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years;

And she was wean'd,—I never shall forget it,—

Of all the days of the year, upon that day;

For I had then laid wormwood to my dug,

Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall,

My lord and you were then at Mantua:—

Nay, I do bear a brain:—But, as I said,

When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple

Of my dug, and felt it bitter, pretty fool!

To see it teichy, and fall out with the dug,

Shake, quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need, I trow,

To bid me trudge.

And since that time it is eleven years;

For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,

She could have run and waddled all about,

For even thod day before, she broke her brow:

And then my husband—God be with his soul!

'A was a merry man;—took up the child:

'Yea, quoth he, dost thou fall upon thy face?

Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast more wit;

Wilt thou not, Julie? and, by my holy-dam,

The pretty wretch left crying, and said—Ay:

To see now, how a jest shall come about!

I warrant, an I should live a thousand years,

I never should forget it: Wilt thou not, Julie?

quoth he:

And, pretty fool, it stinted,⁹ and said—Ay.

6 i. e. to my sorrow. This old word is introduced for the sake of the jingle between teen, and four, and fourteen.

7 Mr. Tyrwhitt thinks that Shakspeare had in view the earthquake which had been felt in England in his own time, on the 6th of April, 1590; and that we may from hence conjecture that Romeo and Juliet was writ ten in 1591.

8 The nurse means to boast of her retentive faculty.—

To bear a brain was to possess much mental capacity either of tradition, ingenuity, or remembrance. Thus in Marston's Dutch Courtesan:—

'My silly husband, alas! knows nothing of it, tis

I that must bear a braine for all.'

9 To stint is to stop. Barret translates 'Lachrymas

1 The quarto of 1597 adds, 'And yet I know not who are writen here: I must to the learned to learn of them: that's as much as to say, the tailor,' &c.

2 The plantain leaf is a blood-stancher, and was formerly applied to green wounds. So in Albimazar:—
'Help, Armellina, help! I'm fallen i' the cellar:
Bring a fresh plantain-leaf, I've broke my shin.'

3 This cant expression seems to have been once common; it often occurs in old plays. We have one still in use of similar import:—To crack a bottle.

4 Heath says, 'Your lady's love, is the love you bear to your lady, which, in our language, is commonly used for the lady herself.' Perhaps we should read, 'Your lady love.'

5 In all the old copies the greater part of this scene was printed as prose. Capell was the first who exhibited it as verse; the subsequent editors have followed him, but perhaps erroneously.

La. Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam; Yet I cannot choose but laugh,

To think it should leave crying, and say—Ay:

And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone;

A parlous knock, and it cried bitterly.

Yea, quoth my husband, fall'st upon thy face?

Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age;

Wilt thou not, Jule? it stinted, and said—Ay.

Jul. And stint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!

Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd:

An I might live to see thee married once,

I have my wish.

La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very theme

I came to talk of:—Tell me, daughter Juliet,

How stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse,

I'd say, thou hadst suck'd wisdom from thy teat.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger than you,

Here in Verona, ladies of esteem,

Are made already mothers: by my count,

I was your mother much upon these years

That you are now a maid. Thus, then, in brief;—

The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man,

As all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.²

La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.³

La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at our feast;

Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face,

And find delight writ there with beauty's pen;

Examine every married⁴ lineament,

And see how one another lends content;

And what obscur'd in this fair volume lies,

Find written in the margin of his eyes.⁵

supprimere, to stinte weeping; and 'to stinte talke,' by

'sermones restringere.' So Ben Jonson in Cynthia's

Revels:— 'Stint thy babbling tongue,

Fond Echo.'

Again, in What You Will, by Marston:—

'Pish! for shame, stint thy idle chat.'

Spenser uses the word frequently.

1597.

² i.e. as well made as if he had been modelled in

wax. So in Wiley beguiled:— 'Why, he is a man as one should picture him in wax.' So Horace uses 'Cereia brachia,' scuten arms, for arms well shaped.—Od. xiii.

³ Which Dacier explains:— 'Des bras faits au tour comme nous disons d'un bras rond, qu'il est comme

de cire.'

⁴ After this speech of the Nurse, Lady Capulet, in the old quarto, says only:—

'Well, Juliet, how like you of Paris' love?'

She answers, 'I'll look in like,' &c.; and so concludes the scene, without the intervention of that stuff to be found in the later quartos and the folio.

⁵ Thus the quarto of 1599. The quarto of 1609 and the folio read, 'several lineaments.' We have, 'The unity and married calm of states,' in Troilus and Cressida. And in his eighth Sonnet:—

'If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,

By unions married, do offend thine ear.'

⁶ The comments on ancient books were generally printed in the margin. Horatio says, in Hamlet, 'I knew you must be edited by the margin,' &c. So in

The Rape of Lucrece:—

'But she that never cop'd with stranger eyes

Could pick no meaning from their parling looks,

Nor read the subtle shining secreties

Writ in the glassy margin of such books.'

This speech is full of quibbles. The unbound lover is a quibble on the binding of a book, and the binding in marriage; and the word cover is a quibble on the law phrase for a married woman, femme couverte

This precious book of love, this unbound lover,

To beautify him, only lacks a cover:

The fish lives in the sea;⁶ and 'tis much pride,

For fair without the fair within to hide:

That book in many's eyes doth share the glory,

That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;

So shall you share all that he doth possess,

By having him, making yourself no less.

Nurse. No less? nay, bigger; women grow by men.

La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris'

love?

Jul. I'll look to like, if looking liking move;

But no more deep will I endart⁷ mine eye,

Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity.

I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

La. Cap. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A Street. Enter ROMEO, MERCU-

TIO,⁸ BENVOLIO, with five or six Maskers, Torch-

Bearers, and others.

Rom. What, shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?

Or shall we on without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such proximity.⁹

We'll have no cupid hood-wink'd with a scarf,

Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath,¹⁰

Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper;¹¹

Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke

After the prompter, for our entrance:

But, let them measure us by what they will,

We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch,¹²—I am not for this ambuling:

Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

⁶ Dr. Farmer explains this, 'The fish is not yet caught.' Mason thinks that we should read, 'The fish lives in the shell; for the sea cannot be said to be a beautiful cover to a fish, though a shell may.'

The poet may mean nothing more than that those books are most esteemed by the world where valuable contents are embellished by as valuable bindings.

⁷ The quarto of 1597 reads, engage mine eye.

⁸ Shakespeare appears to have formed this character on the following slight hint:— 'Another gentleman, called Mercutio, which was a courtlike gentleman, very well beloved of all men, and by reason of his pleasant and courteous behaviour was in all companies wel entertained.'—Painter's Palace of Pleasure, tom.

ii, p. 221.

⁹ In King Henry VIII., where the king introduces himself at the entertainment given by Wolsey, he appears, like Romeo and his companions, in a mask, and sends a messenger before with an apology for his intrusion. This was a custom observed by those who came uninvited, with a desire to conceal themselves, for the sake of intrigue, or to enjoy the greater freedom of conversation. Their entry on these occasions was always prefaced by some speech in praise of the beauty of the ladies, or the generosity of the entertainer; and to the proximity of such introductions it is probable Romeo is made to allude. In Histriomastix, 1610, a man expresses his wonder that the maskers enter without any compliment:— 'What, come they in so blunt, without device?' Of this kind of masquerading, there is a specimen in Timon, where Cupid precedes a troop of ladies with a speech.

¹⁰ The Tartarian bows resemble in their form the old

Roman or Cupid's bow, such as we see on medals and bas-relief. Shakespeare uses the epithet to distinguish it from the English bow, whose shape is the segment of a circle.

¹¹ See King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 6.

¹² A torch-bearer was a constant appendage to every troop of maskers. To hold a torch was anciently no degrading office. Queen Elizabeth's gentlemen pensioners attended her to Cambridge, and held torches while a play was acted before her in the Chapel of King's College on a Sunday evening.

Mer. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,

With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead,
So stokes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Mer. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings,
And soar with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore enpierced with his shaft,
To soar with his light feathers; and so bound,
I cannot bound¹ a pitch above dull wo:
Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Mer. And, to sink in it, should you burden love,
Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boist'rous: and it pricks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love;
Prick love from pricking, and you beat love down.—

Give me a case to put my visage in:
[Putting on a Mask.]

A visor for a visor!—what care I,
What curious eye doth quote² deformities?

Here are the beetle-brows, shall blush for me.

Ben. Come, knock, and enter: and no sooner in,
But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rushes³ with their heels;
For I am prov'd⁴ with a grandire phrase,—

I'll be a candle-holder, and look on,—
The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.⁴

Mer. Tut! dun's the mouse, the constable's own word;

If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mire⁵
Of this (save reverence) love, wherein thou stick'st
Up to the ears.—Come, we burn daylight,⁶ ho.

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in delay
We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day.

Take our good meaning; for our judgment sits
Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.⁷

¹ Let Milton on this occasion keep Shakspeare in countenance. Par. Lost, book iv. l. 150:—

— in contempt
At one slight bound high over-leap'd all bound.²

² To quote is to note, to mark. See Hamlet, Act II. Sc. 1.

³ Middleton (the author of The Witch) has borrowed this thought in his play of Blurt Master Constable, 1602:—

— bid him, whose heart no sorrow feels,
Tickle the rushes with his wanton heels,
I have too much lead at mine.³

It has been before observed that the apartments of our ancestors were strewn with rushes, and so it seems was the ancient stage. 'On the very rushes when the Comedy is to dance.'—Decker's Gull's Hornbook, 1609. Shakspeare does not stand alone in giving the manners and customs of his own times to all countries and ages. Marlowe, in his Hero and Leander, describes Hero as — fearing on the rushes to be flung.⁴

⁴ To hold the candle is a common proverbial expression for being an idle spectator. Among Ray's proverbial sentences we have, 'A good candle-holder proves a good gamester.' This is the 'grandire phrase' with which Romeo is proverbied. There is another old proverbial maxim subsequently alluded to, which advises to give over when the game is at the fairest.

⁵ Dun is the mouse is a proverbial saying to us of vague signification, alluding to the colour of the mouse; but frequently employed with no other intent than that of quibbling on the word done. Why it is attributed to a constable we know not. It occurs in the comedy of Patient Griseld, 1603. So in The Two Merry Milk-maids, 1620:—'Why then, 'tis done, and dun's the mouse, and undone all the courtiers.' To draw dun out of the mire was a rural pastime, in which dun meant a dun horse, supposed to be stuck in the mire, and sometimes represented by one of the persons who played, at others by a log of wood. Mr. Gifford has described the game, at which he remembers often to have played, in a note to Ben Jonson's Masque of Christmas, vol. vii. p. 283:—'A log of wood is brought into the midst of the room; this is dun, (the cart horse), and a cry is raised that he is stuck in the mire. Two of the company advance, either with or without ropes, to draw him out. After repeated attempts, they find themselves

Rom. And we mean well, in going to this mask;
But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?
Rom. I dreamt a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I
Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.
Rom. In bed, asleep, while they do dream things true.

Mer. O, then, I see, queen Mab hath been with
She is the fairies' midwife;⁸ and she comes

In shape no bigger than an agate-stone
On the fore-finger of an alderman,⁹

Drawn with a team of little atomies;¹⁰
Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:

Her wagon-spokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;

The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams:

Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;
Her wagoner, a small grey-coated gnat,¹¹

Not half so big as a round little worm
Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid:

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,

Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.
And in this state she gallops night by night

Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love;
On courtiers' knees, that dream on courtiers' straight:

O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees;
O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream;

Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweet-meats tainted are.¹²

Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,¹³

And then dreams he of smelling out a suit:¹⁴
And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,

Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice:

Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,

Of breaches, ambuscados, Spanish blades.¹⁵ unable to do it, and call for more assistance. The game continues till all the company take part in it, when dun is extricated of course; and the merriment arises from the awkward and affected efforts of the rustics to lift the log, and sundry arch contrivances to let the ends of it fall on one another's toes.⁵

⁶ This proverbial phrase, which was applied to superfluous actions in general, occurs again in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

⁷ The quarto of 1597 reads, 'Three times a day,' and right wits instead of five wits.

⁸ The fairies' midwife does not mean the midwife to the fairies, but that she was the person among the fairies whose department it was to deliver the fancies of sleeping men of their dreams, those children of an idle brain. When we say the king's judges, we do not mean persons who judge the king, but persons appointed by him to judge his subjects.—Steevens. Warburton, with some plausibility, reads, 'the fancy's midwife.'

⁹ The quarto of 1597 has, 'of a burgomaster.' The citizens of Shakspeare's time appear to have worn this ornament on the thumb. So Glaphorne in his comedy of Wit in a Constable:—'And an alderman, as I may say to you, he has no more wit than the rest of 'the bench; and that lies in his thumb ring.' Shakspeare compares his fairy to the figure carved on the agate-stone of a thumb ring.

¹⁰ Atomies for atoms.

¹¹ There is a similar fanciful description of Queen Mab's chariot in Drayton's Nymphidia, which was written several years after this tragedy.

¹² This probably alludes to the 'kissing comfits,' mentioned by Falstaff in the last act of the Merry Wives of Windsor.

¹³ This speech received much alteration after the first edition in the quarto of 1597: and Shakspeare has inadvertently introduced the courtier twice. Mr. Tyrwhitt finding 'courtiers' knees' in the first instance printed in the second folio, would read courtiers' (i.e. noblemen's) knees. Steevens remarks that the whole speech bears a resemblance to a passage of Claudian in Sextum Consulatum Honorii Augusti Praefatio.

¹⁴ A place in court.

¹⁵ The quarto of 1597 reads, 'counter mince,' Spanish blades were held in high esteem. A sword was called a Toledo, from the excellence of the Toletan steel.

Of healths five fathom deep ; and then anon
Drums in his ear ; at which he starts and wakes ;
And being thus frighted, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again. This is that very Mab,
That takes the manes of horses in the night :
And bakes the elf-locks¹ in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.
This is the hag, when maids lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to bear,
Making them women of good carriage.²
This, this is she—

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace ;
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talk of dreams ;
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy ;
Which is as thin of substance as the air ;
And more inconstant than the wind, who woos
Even now the frozen bosom of the north,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind, you talk of, blows us from our selves ;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early ; for my mind misgives,
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels ; and expire³ the term
Of a despised life, clos'd in my breast,
By some vile forfeit of untimely death :
But He, that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my sail ! On, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum.⁴ [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.⁵ A Hall in Capulet's House. Musicians waiting. Enter Servants.

1 Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away ? he shift a trencher !⁶ he scrape a trencher !

2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too, 'tis a foul thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard,⁷ look to the plate :—good thou, save me a piece of marchpane ;⁸ and, as thou lovest

1 i. e. fairy locks, locks of hair clotted and tangled in the night. It was a common superstition ; and Warburton conjectures that it had its rise from the horrid disease called Plica Polonica.

2 So in Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Sc. 2 :—

‘——let them be men of great repute and carriage.

‘Moth. Sampson, master ; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage ; for he carried the town-gates.’

3 So in The Rape of Lucrece :—

‘An expir'd date cancell'd ere well begun.’

And in Mother Hubbard's Tale :—

‘Now whereas time flying with wings swift

Expir'd had the term,’ &c.

4 Here the folio adds :—‘They march about the stage, and serving men come forth with their napkins.’

5 This scene is not in the first copy in the quarto of 1597.

6 To shift a trencher was technical. So in The Miseries of Enforst Marriage, 1608 :—‘Learne more manners, stand at your brother's backe, as to shift a trencher neatly.’ &c. Trenchers were used in Shakspeare's time, and long after, by persons of good fashion and quality. They continued common till a late period in many public societies, and are now, or were lately, still retained at Lincoln's Inn.

7 The court cupboard was the ancient sideboard ; it was a cumbersome piece of furniture, with stages or shelves gradually receding, like stairs, to the top, whereon the plate was displayed at festivals. They are mentioned in many of our old comedies. Thus in Chapman's Monsieur D'Olive, 1606 :—‘Here shall stand my court cupboard, with his furniture of plate.’ Again in his May Day, 1611 :—‘Court cupboards planted with flagons, cans, cups, beakers,’ &c. Two of these ancient pieces of furniture are still in Stationer's Hall : they are used at public festivals, to display the antique silver vessels of the Company, consisting of cans, cups, beakers, flagons, &c. There is a print in a curious work, entitled Laurea Austriaca, folio, 1627, representing an entertainment given by King James I. to the Spanish Ambassadors, in 1623 ; from which the reader will get a better notion of the court cupboard than volumes me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell.—Antony ! and Potpan !

2 Serv. Ay, boy ; ready.

1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—
Cheerily, boys ; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all. [They retire behind.]

Enter CAPULET, &c. with the Guests and the Maskers.

Cap. Gentlemen, welcome ! ladies, that have their toes

Unplagu'd with corns, will have a bout with you :—
Ah ha, my mistresses ! which of you all
Will now deny to dance ? she that makes dainty she,
I'll swear hath corns ; Am I come near you now ?
You are welcome, gentlemen ! I have seen the day,
That I have worn a visor ; and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please :—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone :
You are welcome, gentlemen !—Come, musicians, play.

A hall ! a hall !⁹ give room, and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.]

More lights, ye knaves ; and turn the tables up,¹⁰
And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.—
Ah, sirrah, this unlook'd-for sport comes well.

Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin¹¹ Capulet ;
For you and I are past our dancing days :
How long is't now, since last yourself and I
Were in a mask ?

2 Cap. By'r lady, thirty years. [much :

1 Cap. What, man ! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so
'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio.—
Come pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty years ; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more : his son is elder, sir :
His son is thirty.

1 Cap. Will you tell me that ?

His son was but a ward two years ago.¹²

Rom. What lady's that, which doth enrich the hand
Of yonder knight ?

Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright !
It seems she¹³ hangs upon the cheek of night of description would afford him. It was sometimes also called a cupboard of plate, and a livery cupboard.

8 Marchpane was a constant article in the desserts of our ancestors. It was a sweet cake, composed of filberts, almonds, pistachoes, pine kernels, and sugar of roses, with a small portion of flour. They were often made in fantastic forms. In 1562, the Stationers' Company paid 'for ix. marchpaynes xxvi. s. viii. d.'

9 An exclamation commonly used to make room in a crowd for any particular purpose, as we now say, a ring ! a ring ! So Marston, Sat. iii. :—

‘——A hall ! a hall !

Room for the spheres, the orbs celestia.

Will dance Kempe's jig.

The passages are numberless that may be cited in illustration of this phrase.

10 The ancient tables were flat leaves or boards joined by hinges and placed on tressels ; when they were to be removed they were therefore turned up. The phrase is sometimes taken up. Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, ed. 1825, p. 193 :—‘After that the boards-end was taken up.’

11 Cousin was a common expression for kinsman.
Thus in Hamlet, the king, his uncle and stepfather, addresses him with—

‘But now, my cousin Hamlet and my son.’

12 This speech stands thus in the quarto of 1597 :—

‘Will you tell me that ? it cannot be so :

His son was but a ward three years ago ;

Good youths, 'Faith !—Oh, youth's a jolly thing !

There are many trifling variations in almost every speech of this play ; but when they are of little consequence I have not encumbered the page with them.
The last of these three lines, however, is natural and pleasing.—Steevens.

13 Steevens reads, with the second folio :—

‘Her beauty hangs upon,’ &c.

Shakspeare has the same thought in his 27th Sonnet :—

‘Which like a jewel hung in ghastly night,

Makes black night beauteous, and her old face new.’

Lyly in his Euphues, has ‘A fair pearl in a Morian's ear.’

Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear:
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows:
The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,
And, touching hers, make happy my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague:—
Fetch me my rapier, boy:—What! dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To floor and scorn at our solemnity?
Now, by the stock and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

1 Cap. Why, how now, kinsman? wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cap. Young Romeo is't?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone,
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all this town,
Here in my house, do him disparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will; the which if thou respect,
Show a fair presence, and put off these frowns,
An ill beseeeming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest;
I'll not endure him.

1 Cap. He shall be endur'd;
What, Goodman boy?—I say, he shall;—Go to;—
Am I the master here, or you? go to.
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my soul!—
You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-hoop! you'll be the man!

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

1 Cap. Go to, go to.

You are a saucy boy:—Is't so, indeed?—
This trick may chance to scath' you;—I know what.
You must contrary me! marry, 'tis time—
Well said, my hearts:—You are a princeling; go:—
Be quiet, or—More light, more light, for shame!—
I'll make you quiet; What! Cheerly, my hearts.

Tyb. Patience perforce¹ with wilful choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw: but this intrusion shall,
Now seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall. [Exit.]

Rom. If I profane with my unworthy hand

[To JULIET.]

This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this:—
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,

Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss.

Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmers too?

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;

They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.

1 i. e. do you an injury. The word has still this meaning in Scotland.

2 A pert forward youth. The word is apparently a corruption of the Latin præcor.

3 There is an old adage—'Patience perforce is a medicine for a mad dog.' To which this is an allusion.

4 Juliet had said before, that 'palm to palm was holy palmers' kiss.' She afterwards says, that 'palmers have lips that they must use in prayer.' Romeo replies, That the prayer of his lips was, that they might do what hands do; that is, that they might kiss.

5 The poet here, without doubt, copied from the mode of his own time; and kissing a lady in a public assembly, we may conclude, was not then thought indecorous. In King Henry VIII. Lord Sands is represented as kissing Anne Boleyn, next whom he sat at supper.

Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect I take.

Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is purg'd.

[Kissing her.]

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.

Rom. Sin from my lips? O, trespass sweetly urg'd.
Give me my sin again.

Jul. You kiss by the book.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.

Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelor!

Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous:
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal:
I tell you,—he, that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O, dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Ben. Away, begone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Av, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.
Is it e'en so? Why, then I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night:—
More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed.

Ah, sirrah, [To 2 Cap.] by my fay, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest. [Exit all but JULIET and Nurse.]

Jul. Come hither nurse: What is your gentleman?

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.
Jul. What's he, that follows there, that would not dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go ask his name:—if he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague,
The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!

Too early seen unknown, and known too late!

Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
That I must love a loathed enemy.

Nurse. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now
Of one I danc'd withal. [One calls within, Juliet.]

Nurse. Anon, anon:—

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone.

[Exit.]

Enter CHORUS.²

Now old desire doth in his deathbed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir;

That fair,³ which love groan'd for, and would die,
With tender Juliet match'd is now not fair.

Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,
Alike bewitched by the charm of looks;

But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,
And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks.

Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear;

And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

To meet her new-beloved any where:

But passion lends them power, time means to meet,
Temp'ring extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. An open Place, adjoining Capulet's Garden. Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Can I go forward, when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.

[He climbs the Wall, and leaps down within it.]

Enter BENVOLIO, and MERCUTIO.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo!

Mer. He is wise;

And, on my life, hath stolen him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall:

Call, good Mercutio.

Mer. Nay, I'll conjure, too.—

Romeo! humours! madman! passion! lover!

Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh,

Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;

Cry but—Ah me! pronounce² but—love and dove;

Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word;

One nickname for her purblind son and heir,

Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim,¹

When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid.—

He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not;

The ape⁴ is dead, and I must conjure him.—

I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,

By her high forehead, and her scarlet lip,

By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,

And the demesnes that there adjacent lie,

That in thy likeness thou appear to us.

Ben. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him: 'twould anger him

To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle

Of some strange nature, letting it there stand

Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it down;

That were some spite: my invocation

Is fair and honest, and in his mistress' name,

I conjure only but to raise up him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among those trees,

To be consorted with the humours⁴ night:

Blind is his love, and best befits the dark.

Mer. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree,

And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,

As maids call medlars, when they laugh alone.⁵—

Romeo, good night;—I'll to my truckle-bed;

This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:

Come, shall we go?

Ben. Go, then; for 'tis in vain

To seek him here, that means not to be found.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Capulet's Garden. Enter ROMEO.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.

[JULIET appears above, at a Window.]

But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks!

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun!

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
Who is already sick and pale with grief,
That thou her maid art far more fair than she:

Be not her maid,⁷ since she is envious;

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,

And none but fools do wear it; cast it off.—

It is my lady: O, it is my love:

O, that she knew she were!

She speaks, yet she says nothing; What of that?

Her eye discourses, I will answer it.

I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:

Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,

Having some business, do entreat her eyes

To twinkle in their spheres till they return.

What if her eyes were there, they in her head?

The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars,

As daylight doth a lamp; her eye in heaven

Would through the airy region stream so bright,

That birds would sing, and think it were not night.

See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!

O, that I were a glove upon that hand,

That I might touch that cheek!

Jul. Ah me!

Rom. She speaks:—

O, speak again, bright angel! for thou art

As glorious to this sight,⁸ being o'er my head,

As is a winged messenger of heaven

Unto the white-upturned wond'ring eyes

Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,

When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,

And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O, Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou

Romeo?

Deny thy father, and refuse thy name:

Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,

And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

[Aside.]

Jul. 'Tis but thy name: that is my enemy;—

Thou art thyself though, not a Montague.

What's Montague! it is nor hand, nor foot,

Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part

Belonging to a man. O, be some other name!

What's in a name? that which we call a rose,

By any other name would smell as sweet;

So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd:

Retain that dear perfection which he owes,

Without that title: Romeo, doff thy name;

And for that name, which is no part of thee,

Take all myself.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:

Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd;

Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that, thus bescreen'd in night,

So stumbling on my counsel?

Rom. By a name

I know not how to tell thee who I am:

My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,

Because it is an enemy to thee;

Had I it written, I would tear the word.

² This is the reading of the quarto of 1597. Those of 1599 and 1609, and the folio, read provaunt, an evident corruption. The folio of 1632 has couple meaning couple, which has been the reading of many modern editions. Steevens endeavours to persuade himself and his readers that provaunt may be right, and mean provide, furnish.

³ All the old copies read, Abraham Cupid. The alteration was proposed by Mr. Upon. It evidently alludes to the famous archer Adam Bell. So in Decker's Satiromastix:—"He shoots his bolt but seldom; but when Adam lets go, he hits." "He shoots at thee too, Adam Bell; and his arrows stick here." The ballad alluded to is King Cophetua and the Beggar-Maid, or, as it is called in some copies, 'The Song of a Beggar and a King.' It may be seen in the first volume of Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. The following stanza Shakspeare had particularly in view:—

'The blinded boy that shoots so trim,

From heaven down did he die;

He drew a dart and shot at him,

In place where he did lie.'

⁴ This phrase in Shakspeare's time was used as an expression of tenderness like poor fool, &c.

⁵ i. e. the humid, the moist deuy night. Chapman uses the word in this sense in his translation of Homer, b. ii. edit. 1598:

'The other gods and knights at arms, slept all the humorous night.'

And Drayton in the thirteenth Song of his Polyolbion:—

'—which late the humorous night

Bespangled had with pearl.'

And in The Barons' Wars, canto i.:—

'The humorous fogs deprive us of his light.

Shakspeare uses the epithet, 'caporous night,' in Measure for Measure.

⁶ After this line in the old copies are two lines of ribaldry, which have justly been degraded to the margin:—

'O Romeo, that she were, ah that she were

An open et cetera, thou a poppin pear.'

⁷ i. e. be not a votary to the moon, to Diana.

⁸ The old copies read, 'to this night.' Theobald made the emendation, which appears to be warranted by the context.

Jul. My ears have not yet drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's utterance,¹ yet I know the sound;
Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dislike.²

Jul. How cam'st thou hither, tell me? and wherefore?

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb;
And the place death, considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out:
And what love can do, that dares love attempt,
Therefore thy kinsmen are no let³ to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye,
Than twenty of their swords;⁴ look thou but sweet,
And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their sight;

And, but⁵ thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued⁶ wanting of thy love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to inquire:
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.

I am no pilot; yet, wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the furthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know'st, the mask of night is on my face;

Else would a maiden blush belpaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.
Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain deny
What I have spoke; but farewe'll compliment!⁷

Dost thou love me? I know, thou wilt say—Ay;
And I will take thy word: yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou mayst prove false; at lovers' perjuries,
They say, Jove laughs.⁸ O, gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:—
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but, else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond;
And therefore thou may'st think my haviour light:
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.⁹

1 We meet with almost the same words as those here attributed to Romeo in King Edward III. a tragedy, 1596:—

'I might perceive his eye in her eye lost,
His eye to drink her sweet tongue's utterance.'

2 I.e. if either thee displease. This was the usual phraseology of Shakespeare's time. So it likes me well; for it pleases me well.

3 I.e. no stop, no hindrance. Thus the quarto of 1597. The subsequent copies read, 'no stop to me.'

4 Beaumont and Fletcher have copied this thought in The Maid in the Mill:—

'The lady may command, sir;

She bears an eye more dreadful than your weapon.'

5 But is here again used in its exceptive sense, without or unless.

6 I.e. postponed, delayed or deferred to a more distant period. So in Act iv. Sc. 1:—

'I hear thou must, and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to the county.'

The whole passage above, according to my view of it, has the following construction:—'I have night to screen me; yet unless thou love me, let them find me here. It were better that they ended my life at once, than to have death delayed, and to want thy love.'

7 I.e. farewe'll attention to forms.

8 This Shakespeare found in Ovid's Art of Love; perhaps in Marlowe's translation:—

'For Jove himself sits in the azure skies,

And laughs below at lovers' perjuries.'

With the following beautiful antithesis to the above lines (says Mr. Douce) every reader of taste will be gratified. It is given memoriter from some old play, the name of which is forgotten:—

'When lovers swear true faith, the listening angels
Stand on the golden battlements of heaven,
And wait their vows to the eternal throne.'

I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou over-heard'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore pardon me;
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver¹⁰ all these fruit-tree tops,—

Jul. O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all;

Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—

Jul. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night:

It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say—It lightens.¹¹ Sweet, good night!
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast!

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?

Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it:
And yet I would it were to give again.

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love?

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.

And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.

[Nurse calls within.

I hear some noise within; Dear love, adieu!

Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay, but a little, I will come again. [Exit

Rom. O, blessed, blessed night! I am afeard,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night, indeed.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,¹²
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,

9 To be distant, or shy.

10 This image struck Pope:—

'The moonbeam trembling falls,

And tips with silver all the walls.'

And in the celebrated simile at the end of the eight liad:—'And tips with silver every mountain's head.'

11 So in The Miracles of Moses, by Drayton, 1604:—
'— lightning ceaselessly to burn,

Swifter than thought from place to place to pass,

And being gone, doth suddenly return

Ere you could say precisely what it was.'

The same thought occurs in A Midsummer Night's Dream.

All the intermediate lines from 'Sweet, good night!' to 'Stay but a little,' &c. were added after the first impression in 1597.

12 In Brooke's Tragical History of Romeo and Juliet, she uses nearly the same expressions:—

'If your thought be chaste, and have on virtue ground,
If wedlock be the end and mark, which your desire hath found,

Obedience set aside, unto my parents due,
The quarrel eke that long ago between our households grew,

Both me and mine I will all whole to you to take,
And following you whereso you go, my father's house
forsake:

But if by wanton love and by unlawful suit
You think in ripest years to pluck my maidenhood's dainty fruit,

You are beguill'd, and now your Juliet you beseech
To cease your suit, and suffer her to live among her likes.'

Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite :
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee my lord throughout the world :

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. I come anon :— But if thou mean'st not well.

I do beseech thee,—

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. By and by, I come :—

To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief :

To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul,—

Jul. A thousand times good night ! [Exit.]

Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.—

Love goes toward love, as school-boys from their books ;

But love from love, toward school with heavy looks. [Retiring slowly.]

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Hist ! Romeo, hist !—O, for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle¹ back again !

Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud ;

Else would I tear the cave² where echo lies,

And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine

With repetition of my Romeo's name ;

Rom. It is my soul, that calls upon my name ;

How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,

Like softest music to attending ears !

Jul. Romeo !

Rom. My sweet !³

Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee ?

Rom. At the hour of nine.

Jul. I will not fail ; 'tis twenty years till then.

I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,

Rememb'ring how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee gone ;

And yet no further than a wanton's bird ;

Who lets it hop a little from her hand,

Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves,

And with a silk thread plucks it back again,

So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would, I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I ;
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.

Good night, good night ! parting is such sweet sorrow,
That I shall say—good night, till it be morrow. [Exit.]

1 The tassel, or tiercel, (for so it should be spelt,) is the male of the goshawk, and is said to be so called because it is a tierce or third less than the female. This is equally true of all birds of prey. This species of hawk had the epithet of gentle annexed to it, from the ease with which it was tamed, and its attachment to man. Tardif, in his book of Falconry, says that the tiercel has its name from being one of three birds usually found in the aerie of a falcon, two of which are females, and the third a male ; hence called tiercelet, or the third. According to the old books of sport the falcon gentle and tiercel gentle are birds for a prince.

2 This strong expression is more suitably employed by Milton :—'A shout that tore hell's concave.'

3 The quarto of 1597 puts the cold, distant, and formal appellation Madam, into the mouth of Romeo.—The two subsequent quartos and the folio have 'my niece,' which is a palpable corruption ; but it is difficult to say what word was intended. 'My sweet,' is the reading of the second folio.

4 In the folio and the three later quartos these four lines are printed twice over, and given once to Romeo and once to the Friar.

5 'Flecked' is spotted, dappled, streaked, or variegated. Lord Surrey uses the word in his translation of the fourth Æneid :—

'Her quivering cheekes flecked with deadly stain.'

So in the old play of The Four Prentices :—

'We'll fleck our white steeds in your Christian blood.'

6 This is the reading of the second folio. The quarto of 1597 reads :—

'From forth day's path and Titan's fiery wheels.'

The quarto of 1599 and the folio have 'burning wheels.'

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast !—

'Would, I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest !

Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell ;

His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. [Exit.]

SCENE III. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR LAURENCE, with a Basket.

Fri. The gray-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,⁷

Checking the eastern clouds with streaks of light ;

And flecked⁸ darkness like a drunkard reels

From forth day's path-way, made by Titan's wheels :⁹

Now, ere the sun advance his burning eye,

The day to cheer, and night's dank dew to dry,

I must fill up this osier cage of ours,

With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers.⁷

The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb ;⁸

What is her burying grave, that is her womb :

And from her womb children of divers kind

We sucking on her natural bosom find ;

Many for many virtues excellent,

None but for some, and yet all different.

O, mickle is the powerful grace⁹ that lies

In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities :

For nought so vile that on the earth doth live,

But to the earth some special good doth give ;

Nor aught so good, but, strain'd from that fair use,

Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse :

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied ;

And vice sometime's by action dignified.

Within the infant rind of this small flower

Poison hath residence, and medicine power :

For this, being smelt, with that part¹⁰ cheers each

part ;

Being tasted, slays all senses with the heart.

Two such opposed foes encamp them still !¹¹

In man as well as herbs, grace, and rude will ;

And, where the worse is predominant,

Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Good morrow, father !

Fri. Benedicite !

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me ?—

Young son, it argues a distemper'd head,

So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed :

Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,

And where care lodges, sleep will never lie ;

7 So Drayton, in the eighteenth Song of his Polyol-bion, speaking of a hermit :—

'His happy time he spends the works of God to see,

In those so sundry herbs which there in plenty grow,

Whose sundry strange effects he only seeks to know.

And in a little maund, being made of oziers small,

Which serveth him to do full many a thing withal,

He very choicely sorts his simples got abroad.'

Shakspeare has very artificially prepared us for the part Friar Lawrence is afterwards to sustain. Having thus early discovered him to be a chemist, we are not surprised when we find him furnishing the draught which produces the catastrophe of the piece. The passage was, however, suggested by Arthur Brooke's poem.

8 'Omniparens, eadem rerum commune sepulchrum.'

Lucretius.

'The womb of nature, and perhaps her grave.'

Milton.

'Time's the king of men,

For he's their parent, and he is their grave.'

Pericles.

9 Efficacious virtue.

10 I.e. with its odour. Not, as Malone says, 'with the olfactory nerves, the part that smells.'

11 So in Shakspeare's Lover's Complaint :—

'—terror and dear modesty

Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.'

Our poet has more than once alluded to these opposed foes. So in Othello :—

'Yea, curse his better angel from his side.'

See also his forty-fourth Sonnet. He may have remembered a passage in the old play of King Arthur,

1587 :—

'Peace hath three foes encamp'd in our breaste,

Ambition, wrath, and envie'

But where unbruised youth with unstuff'd brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign :

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art uprousd by some distemp'rance ;
Or if not so, then here I hit it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin ! wast thou with Rosaline ?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father ? no ;
I have forgot that name, and that name's wo.

Fri. That's my good son : But where hast thou been, then ?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.

I have been feasting with mine enemy :
Where on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded : both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies :
I bear no hatred, blessed man ; for, lo,
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift ;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is set

On the fair daughter of rich Capulet :
As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine ;
And all combin'd, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage : When, and where, and how,
We met, we woo'd, and made exchange of vow,
I'll tell thee as we pass ; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us this day.

Fri. Holy Saint Francis ! what a change is here !
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken ? young men's love then lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.

Jesu Maria ! what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline !
How much salt water thrown away in waste,
To season love, that of it doth not taste !
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears ;
Lo, here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet :
If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline ;
And art thou chang'd ? pronounce this sentence
then—

Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'st me off for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,
To lay one in, another out to have.

1 This apparent false concord occurs in many places, not only of Shakspeare, but of all old English writers.
It is sufficient to observe that in the Anglo-Saxon and very old English the third person plural of the present tense ends in eth, and often familiarly in es, as might be exemplified from Chaucer and others. This idiom was not worn out in Shakspeare's time, who must not therefore be tried by rules which were invented after his time. We have the same grammatical construction in Cymbeline :—

'His steeds to water at those springs

On challic'd flowers that lies.'

And in Venus and Adonis :—

'She lifts the coffer lids that close his eyes

Where lo ! two lamps burnt out in darkness lies.'

Again in a former scene of this play :—

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,

Which once untangled much misfortune bodes.'

2 'It is incumbent upon me, or it is of importance to me to use extreme haste.' So in King Richard III. :—

'It stands me much upon,

To stop all hopes,' &c.

3 The allusion is to archery. The clout, or white mark, at which the arrows were direct, was fastened by a black pin, placed in the centre of it. To hit this was the highest ambition of every marksman. So in No Wit like a Woman's, a comedy by Middleton, 1657 :

'They have shot two arrows without heads,

They cannot suck it in the but yet ; hold out, knight,

And I'll cleave the black pin in the midst of the white.'

So in Marlowe's Tamburlaine :—

Rom. I pray thee, chide not : she, whom I love
now,

Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow ;
The other did not so.

Fri. O, she knew well,
Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be ;
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households' rancour to pure love.

Rom. O, let us hence ; I stand on sudden haste.*

Fri. Wisely, and slow ; they stumble that run fast. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A Street. Enter BENVOLIO and MERCUTIO.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be ?— Came he not home to-night ?

Ben. Not to his father's ; I spoke with his man.

Mer. Ah, that same pale hard-hearted wench, that Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet,

Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man, that can write, may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo, he is already dead !
stabbed with a white wench's black eye ; shot through the ear with a love-song ; the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft :
And is he a man to encounter Tybalt ?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt ?

Mer. More than prince of cats,⁴ I can tell you.
O, he is the courageous captain of compliments.
He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion ; rests me his minion rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom : the very butcher of a silk button,⁵ a duellist, a duellist ; a gentleman of the very first house,—of the first and second cause :⁶ Ah, the immortal passado ! the punto reverso ! the hay !⁷

Ben. The what ?

Mer. The pox of such antic, lispings, affecting fantasies, these new tuners of accents !—By Jesu, a very good blade !—a very tall man—a very good where !—Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grandsire,⁸ that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these par- donnez-moy, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench ?⁹ O,
their bons, their bons !

* For kings are clouts that every man shoots at.

Our crown the pin that thousands seek to cleave.*

4 Tybert, the name given to a cat in the old storybook of Reynard the Fox. So in Decker's Satiromastix.

* Tho' you were Tybert, prince of long-tailed cats.

Again, in Have With You to Saffron Walden, by Nash :

'Not Tybert prince of cats.'

5 So in the Return from Parnassus :—

'Strikes his poinard at a button's breadth.'

The phrase also occurs in the Fantaisies de Brusca-ville, 1612, p. 191 :—'Un coup de mousquet sans four- chette dans le sixieme bouton.'

6 i. e. a gentleman of the first rank, or highest eminence, among these duellists ; and one who understands the whole science of quarrelling, and will tell you of the first cause, and the second cause, for which a man is to fight. The Clown, in As You Like It, talks of the se- venth cause in the same sense.

7 All the terms of the fencing school were originally Italian : the rapier, or small thrusting sword, being first used in Italy. The hay is the word hay, you have it, used when a thrust reaches the antagonist. Our fencers on the same occasion cry out ha !

8 Humorously apostrophising his ancestors, whose sober times were unacquainted with the fopperies here complained of.

9 During the ridiculous fashion which prevailed of great 'boulstered breeches,' (See Strutt's Manners and Customs, vol. iii. p. 86 ; Strype's Annals, vol. i. p. 78, Appendix ; vol. ii. Appendix, note 17,) it is said that it was necessary to cut away hollow places in the benches

Enter ROMEO.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring:—O, flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified!—Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flow'd in; Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;—marry, she had a better love to be-rhyme her: Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, holdings and harlots; Thisbe, a gray eye or so,¹ but not to the purpose.—Signior Romeo, bon jour! there's a French salutation to your French slop.² You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip, sir, the slip; Can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and, in such a case as mine, a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That's as much as to say—such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning—to court'sy.

Mer. Thou has most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my pump well flowered.³

Mer. Well said: Follow me this jest now, till thou hast worn out thy pump; that, when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.

Rom. O, single-soled⁴ jest, solely singular for the singleness.

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio; my wits fail.

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase,⁵ I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than, I am sure, I have in my whole five: Was I with you there for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast never with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting;⁶ it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O, here's a wit of cheverel,⁷ that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad: which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me stop in my tale against the hair.⁸

Ben. Thou would'st else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O, thou art deceiv'd, I would have made it short: for I was come to the whole depth of my tale: and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly gear!

Enter NURSE and PETER.

Mer. A sail, a sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt, and a smock.

Nurse. Peter!

Peter. Anon!

Nurse. My fan, Peter.⁹

Mer. 'Pr'ythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den,¹⁰ fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. 'Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick¹¹ of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you?

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said;—For himself to mar, quoth a?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for 'fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yea, is the worst well? very well took, i' faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will indite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, sir; unless a hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

An old hare hoar,¹²

And an old hare hoar,

Is very good meat in lent:

But a hare that is hoar,

Is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent.—

of the House of Commons, to make room for those monstrous protuberances, without which those who stood on the new form could not sit at ease on the old bench.

1 A gray eye appears to have meant what we now call a blue eye. He means to admit that Thisbe had a tolerable fine eye.

2 The slop was a kind of wide-kneed breeches, or rather trowsers.

3 Here is a vein of wit too thin to be easily found. The fundamental idea, that Romeo wore pinked pumps, that is, punched with holes in figures. It was the custom to wear ribands in the shoes formed in the shape of roses or other flowers. Thus in The Masque of Gray's Inn, 1614:—'Every masker's pump was fastened with a flower suitable to his cap.'

4 Malone and Steevens have made strange work with their conjectures of the meaning of single-soled. I have shown, (in a former note,) that single meant simple, silly. Single-soled had also the same meaning:—'He is a good senglill soule, and can do no harm; est doli nescius non simplex.'—Horman's Vulgaria.

5 One kind of horserace, which resembled the flight of wild geese, was formerly known by this name.—Two horses were started together, and which ever rider could get the lead, the other rider was obliged to follow him wherever he chose to go. This explains the pleasant kept up here. 'My wit fails,' says Mercutio. Romeo exclaims briskly, 'Switch and spurs, switch and spurs.' To which Mercutio rejoins,

'Nay, if thy wits run the wild goose chase,' &c. Burton mentions this sport, Anat. of Melan. p. 266, edit. 1632.—See also the article Chase in Chambers's Dictionary.

6 The allusion is to an apple of that name.

7 Soft stretching leather, kid leather.

8 This phrase, which is of French extraction, a contre poil, occurs again in Troilus and Cressida:—'Merry against the hair.'

9 The business of Peter carrying the Nurse's fan, seems ridiculous to modern manners, but it was formerly the practice. In The Serving Man's Comfort, 1598, we are informed, 'The mistress, must have one to carry her cloake and hood, another her fanne.' So in Love's Labour's Lost:—'To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan.'

10 i.e. 'God give you a good even.' The first of these contractions is common in our old dramas. So in Brome's Northern Lass:—'God you good even, sir.'

11 So in King Henry VI. Part III. Act I. Sc. 4:—

'And made an evening at the nootidie prick,' i.e. the point of noon. A prick is a point, a note of distinction in writing, a stop. So in Bright's Character, or Arte of Short Writing, 1588:—'If the worde end in ed, as I loved, then make a prick in the character of the word on the left side.'

12 Hoar, or hoary is often used for mouldy, as things grow white from moulding. These lines seem to have been part of an old song. In the quarto, 1597, we have this stage direction: 'He walks by them [i.e. the Nurse and Peter] and sings.'

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady; farewell, lady, lady, lady.¹

[Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.]

Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery?²

Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down an 'a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirts; I am none of his skains-mates:—And thou must stand by too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure?

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you: I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knave!—'Pray you, sir, a word: and, as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out; what she bade me say, I will keep to myself: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say: for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very weak dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee,— Nurse. Good heart! and, if faith, I will tell her as much: Lord, lord, she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come to shrift This afternoon;

And there she shall at Friar Laurence's cell Be shriv'd, and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to; I say, you shall.

Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey-wall:

Within this hour my man shall be with thee;

And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair,⁴

Which to the high top-gallant of my joy

Must be my convoy in the secret night.

Farewell!—Be trusty, and I'll quit thy pains.

Farewell!—Commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now God in heaven bless thee!—Hark you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

1 The burthen of an old song. See Twelfth Night, Act II. Sc. 3.

2 Ropery was anciently used in the same sense as roguey is now. So in The Three Ladies of London, 1584:—

'Thou art very pleasant, and full of thy roperye.'

3 By skains-mates the old lady probably means swaggering companions. A skain, or skein, was an Irish knife or dagger, a weapon suitable to the purpose of ruffling fellows. Green, in his Quip for an Upstart Courtier, describes 'an ill-favoured knave, who wore by his side a skeine, like a brewer's bung knife.'

4 I. e. like stairs of rope in the tackle of a ship. A stair, for a flight of stairs, is still the language of Scotland, and was once common to both kingdoms.

5 So in Arthur Brooke's poem:—

'A pretty babe, quoth she, it was, when it was young, Lord, how it could full prettily have prated with its tongue.'

6 The Nurse is represented as a prating, silly creature; she says that she will tell Romeo a good joke about his mistress, and asks him whether rosemary and Romeo do not both begin with a letter: he says, yes, an

Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say—

Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

Rom. I warrant thee; my man's as true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady,—lord, lord!—when 'twas a little prating thing,⁵—O,—there's a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain lay knife aboard: but she, good soul, had as lieve see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man: but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout in the varsal world. Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?⁶

Rom. Ay, nurse; What of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mocker! that's the dog's name. R is for the dog. No; I know it begins with some other letter: and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Commend me to thy lady.

[Exit.]

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times.—Peter!

Pet. Anon!

Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before.

[Exeunt]

SCENE V. Capulet's Garden. Enter JULIET.

Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send the nurse;

In half an hour she promis'd to return.

Perchance, she cannot meet him: that's not so.—

O, she is lame! love's heralds should be thoughts,

Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams,

Driving back shadows over louring hills:

Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love,

And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Now is the sun upon the highest hill

Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve

Is three long hours,—yet she is not come.

Had she affections, and warm youthful blood,

She'd be as swift in motion as a ball;

My words would bandy her to my sweet love,

And his to me:

But old folks, many foign as they were dead;

Unwieldy, slow, heavy and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse and PETER.

O, God, she comes!—O, honey nurse, what news?

Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit PETER.]

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O, Lord! why look'st thou sad?

Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;

If good, thou sham'st the music of sweet news

By playing it to me with so sour a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave awhile:—

Fie, how my bones ache! What a jaunt have I had!

Jul. I would, thou had'st my bones, and I thy

news:

Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good nurse, speak.

R. She, whom we must suppose could not read, thought he mocked her, and says, No, sure I know better, R is the dog's name, your's begins with some other letter. This is natural enough, and in character. R put her in mind of that sound which dogs make when they snarl. Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, says, 'R is the dog's letter, and hirrth in the sound.' 'Irritata canis quod R. R. quam plurima dicat.'

Luci.

7 The speech is thus continued in the quarto, 1597:

'—should be thoughts,

And run more swift than hasty powder fired

Doth hurry from the fearful cannon's mouth

O, how she comes! Tell me, gentle nurse,

What says my love?

The greatest part of this scene is likewise added since that edition. Shakspeare, however, seems to have thought one of the ideas comprised in the foregoing quotation from the earliest quarto too valuable to be lost. He has, therefore, inserted it in Romeo's first speech to the Apothecary, in Act v.:

'As violently as hasty powder fired

Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.'

Nurse. Jesu, what haste? can you not stay awhile?

Do you not see, that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou of breath, when thou hast breath

To say to me—thou art out of breath?

The excuse, that thou dost make in this delay,

Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.

Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that;

Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance:

Let me be satisfied, Is't good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare: He is not the flower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Go thy ways, wench; serve God.—What, have you dined at home?

Jul. No, no: But all this I did know before;

What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head akes! what a head have I?

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.

My back o' other side,—O, my back, my back!—

Beshrew your heart for sending me about,

To catch my death with jaunting up and down!

Jul. Faith, I am sorry that thou art not well:

Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman, And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, And, I warrant, a virtuous:—Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within;

Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest?

Your love says like an honest gentleman,—

Where is your mother?

Nurse. O, god's lady dear!

Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;

Is this the poultrie for my aking bones?

Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a coil,—come, what says Romeo?

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shrift to-day?

Jul. I have.

Nurse. Then hie you hence to Friar Laurence's cell,

There stays a husband to make you a wife:

Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks,

They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.

Hie you to church; I must another way,

To fetch a ladder, by the which your love

Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark:

I am the drudge and toil in your delight;

But you shall bear the burden soon at night.

Go, I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune!—honest nurse, farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR LAURENCE and ROMEO.¹

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act, That after-hours with sorrow chide us not!

Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can, It cannot countervail the exchange of joy That one short minute gives me in her sight: Do thou but close our hands with holy words,

¹ This scene is exhibited in quite another form in the first quarto, 1597. But it is hardly worth exhibiting here in its original state. The reader may see it in the variorum Shakspeare, or in the play as published by Steevens among the twenty quartos.

² So in Shakspeare's Rape of Lucrece:—

'These violent vanities can never last.'

³ 'He that travels too fast is as long before he comes to the end of his journey as he that travels slow. Precipitation produces mishap.'—Johnson.

⁴ This passage originally stood thus:—

'Youth's love is quick, swifter than swiftest speed,

See where she comes!—

So light a foot ne'er hurts the trodden flower;

Of love and joy, see, see, the sovereign power!'

Then love-devouring death do what he dare. It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends,¹ And in their triumph die! like fire and powder, Which, as they kiss, consume: The sweetest honey Is loathsome in his own deliciousness, And in the taste confounds the appetite: Therefore, love moderately: long love doth so; Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.²

Enter JULIET.

Here comes the lady:—O, so light a foot

Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:³

A lover may bestride the gossamers⁴

That idle in the wanton summer air,

And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else are his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy

Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be more

To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath

This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue

Unfold the imagin'd happiness that both

Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit,⁵ more rich in matter than in words,

Braggs of his substance, not of ornament:

They are but beggars that can count their worth;⁶

But my true love is grown to such excess,

I cannot sum up half my sum of wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, and we will make short work;

For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone,

Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A public Place. Enter MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire;

The day is hot,¹ the Capulets abroad,

And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl;

For now these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellows, that when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, God send me no need of thee! and, by the operation of the second cup, draws it on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes: What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg, for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his

⁵ See King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 6.

⁶ Conceit here means imagination. Vide Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 4.

⁷ So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.'

⁸ It is observed, that, in Italy, almost all assassinations are committed during the heat of summer. In Sir Thomas Smith's Commonwealth of England, 1583, b. ii. c. xix. p. 70, it is said:—'And commonly every yeere, or each second yeere, in the beginning of sommer or afterwards, (for in the warme time the people for the most part be more unruly,) even in the calme time of peace, the prince with his council chooseth out,' &c.

new shoes with old riband? and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling!¹

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee simple? O, simple!²

Enter TYBALT, and others.

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them. Gentlemen, good den: a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that, sir, if you will give me occasion.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consortest with Romeo,—

Mer. Consort!³ what, dost thou make us minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick; here's that shall make you dance. 'Zounds, consort!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men: Either withdraw into some private place, Or reason coldly of your grievances, Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze;

I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter ROMEO.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir! here comes my man.

Mer. But I'll be hang'd, sir, if he wear your livery: Marry, go before to the field, he'll be your follower; Your worship, in that sense, may call him—man.

Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee, can afford No better term than this—Thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee Doth much excuse the appertaining rage To such a greeting:—Villain am I none; Therefore farwell. I see thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries That thou hast done me; therefore turn, and draw.

Rom. I do protest, I never injur'd thee; But love thee better than thou canst devise, Till thou shalt know the reason of my love: And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.

Mer. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!

*A la stoccata*⁴ carries it away. [Draws.]

Tybalt. you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Tyb. What would'st thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of cats,⁵ nothing but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher⁶ by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.

[Drawing.]

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado. [They fight.]

1 I.e. thou wilt endeavour to restrain me by prudential advice from quarrelling.

2 This and the foregoing speech have been added since the first quarto, with some few circumstances in the rest of the scene, as well as in the ensuing one.

3 To comprehend Mercutio's captious indignation, it should be remembered that a consort was the old term for a set or company of musicians.

4 The Italian term for a thrust or stab with a rapier.

5 Alluding to his name. See Act ii. Sc. 4.

6 Warburton says that we should read pitché, which signifies a coat or covering of skin or leather; meaning the scabbard. A pitché or leathern coat seems to have been the common dress of a carman. The old copy reads—scabbard.

7 After this the quarto, 1597, continues Mercutio's speech as follows:—

—A pox o' both your houses! I shall be fairly mounted upon four men's shoulders for your house of the Montagues and the Capulets: and then some peasanly rogue, some sexton, some base slave, shall write my epitaph, that Tybalt came and broke the

Rom. Draw, Benvolio:

Beat down their weapons:—Gentlemen, for shame Forbear this outrage:—Tybalt—Mercutio—The prince expressly hath forbid this bandying In Verona streets:—hold, Tybalt;—good Mercutio.

[Exeunt TYBALT and his Partizans.]

Mer. I am hurt;—

A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:—Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What, art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 'tis enough.—

Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a surgeon.

[Exit Page.]

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve: ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man.⁷ I am peppered, I warrant, for this world:—A plague o' both your houses!—Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!—Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall faint.—A plague o' both your houses! They have made worm's meat of me:

I have it, and soundly too:—Your houses! [Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO]

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally, My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt In my behalf; my reputation stain'd With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour Hath been my kinsman:—O, sweet Juliet, Thy beauty hath made me effeminate, And in my temper soften'd valour's steel.

Re-enter BENVOLIO.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead; That gallant spirit hath aspir'd⁸ the clouds, Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend;⁹

This but begins the wo, others must end.

Re-enter TYBALT.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain!

Away to heaven, respective lenity,¹⁰

And fire-ey'd fury be my conduct!¹¹ now:—

Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again,

That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul

Is but a little way above our heads,

Staying for thine to keep him company;

Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here, Shalt with him hence.

prince's laws, and Mercutio was slain for the first and second cause. Where's the surgeon?

Boy. He's come, sir.

Mer. Now he'll keep a mumbleing in my guts on the other side.—Come, Benvolio, lend me thy hand: A pox o' both your houses!

As for the jest, 'You shall find me a grave man,' it was better in old language than it is at present; Lidgate says, in his Elegy upon Chaucer:—

'My master Chaucer now is grave.'

In Sir Thomas Overbury's description of a Sexton, Characters, 1616, we have it again:—'At every church-style commonly there's an ale-house; where let him be found never so idle-pated, hee is still a grave drunkard.'

⁸ We never use the verb aspire, without some particle, as to and after. There are numerous ancient examples of a similar use of it with that in the text thus Marlowe, in his Tamburlaine:—

'Until our bodies turn to elements,

And both our souls aspire celestial thrones.'

So in Chapman's version of the ninth Iliad:—

—and aspird the god's eternal feats

⁹ This day's unhappy destiny hangs over the days yet to come. There will yet be more mischief.

¹⁰ 'Respective lenity' is 'considerative gentleness.'

¹¹ Conduct for conductor.

Rom. This shall determine that.

[They fight; TYBALT falls.]

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone!

The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:

Stand not amaz'd:—the prince will doom thee death
If thou art taken:—hence!—be gone!—away!

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool!

Ben. Why dost thou stay?
[Exit ROMEO.]

Enter Citizens, &c.

1 Cit. Which way ran he, that kill'd Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 Cit. Up, sir, go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O, noble prince, I can discover all

The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl:

There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,

That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O, my brother's child!

Unhappy sight! ah, me, the blood is spill'd

Of my dear kinsman!—Prince, as thou art true,²

For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.

O, cousin, cousin!

Prin. Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay;

Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bethink

How nice³ the quarrel was, and urg'd withal

Your high displeasure:—All this—uttered

With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bow'd,

Could not take truce with the unruly spleen

Of Tybalt deaf to peace, but that he tilts

With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast;

Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,

And, with a martial scorn, with one ~~haz~~ beats

Cold death aside, and with the other sends

It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity

Retorts it: Romeo, he cries aloud,

Hold, friends! friends, part! and, swifter ~~than~~ his tongue,

His agile arm beats down their fatal ~~part~~,

1 In the first quarto, 'O! I am fortune's slave.'— Shakespeare is very fond of alluding to the mockery of fortune. Thus we have in Lear:—'I am the natural fool of fortune.' And in Timon of Athens:—'Ye fools of fortune.' In Julius Caesar the expression is, 'He is but fortune's knave.' Hamlet speaks of 'the fools of nature.'
And in Measure for Measure we have 'merely thou art death's fool.' See Pericles, Act iii. Sc. 2.

2 As thou art just and upright. So in King Richard III.—'And if King Edward be as true and just.'

3 Nice here means silly, trifling, or unwont.

4 The charge of falsehood on Benvolio, though produced at hazard, is very just. The author, who seems to intend the character of Benvolio as good, meant perhaps to show how the best minds, in a state of faction and discord, are distorted to criminal partiality.—
Johnson.

5 The sentiment here enforced is different from that found in the first edition, 1597. There the Prince concludes his speech with these words:—
'Pity shall dwell, and govern with us still;

Mercy to all but murderers,—pardoning none that kill.

6 The poet probably remembered Marlowe's King
Edward II. which was performed before 1593:—

'Gallop apace, bright Phoebus, through the skies,

And duskie night in rusty iron car;

Between you both, shorten the time, I pray,

That I may see that most desired day.'

There is also a passage in Barnabe Riche's Farewell to the Militarie Profession, 1533, which bears some resemblance to this.

7 Here ends this speech in the original quarto. The rest of the scene has likewise received considerable alterations and additions.

8 A great deal of ingenious criticism has been bestowed in endeavouring to ascertain the meaning of this expression. Dr. Warburton thought that the run-away in question was the sun; but Mr. Heath has most completely disproved this opinion. Mr. Stevens considers the passage as extremely elliptical, and regards the

And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm
An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled:
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertain'd revenge,
And to 't they go like lightning; for, ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain;
And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly;
This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

La. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague,
Affection makes him false; he speaks not true:
Some twenty of them fought in this black strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life:
I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give;
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio;

Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?

Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's
friend;

His fault concludes but, what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And, for that offence,

Immediately we do exile him hence:

I have an interest in your hates' proceeding,

My blood for your rude brawls doth lie a-bleeding;

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,

That you shall all repent the loss of mine:

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;

Nor tears, nor prayers, shall purchase out abuses,

Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste,

Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.

Bear hence this body, and attend our will:

Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.⁴

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter
JULIET.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,⁵

Towards Phœbus' mansion; such a wagoner

As Phaeton would whip you to the west,

And bring in cloudy night immediately.⁶

Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night!

That run-away's eyes may wink:⁷ and Romeo

Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!—

Lovers can see to do their amorous rites

By their own beauties:⁸ or, if love be blind,

It best agrees with night.—Come, civil⁹ night, night as the run-away; making Juliet wish that its eyes, the stars, might retire, to prevent discovery. Mr.

Justice Blackstone can perceive nothing optative in the lines, but simply a reason for Juliet's wish for a cloudy night; yet, according to this construction of the passage, the grammar is not very easily to be discovered.—

Whoever attentively reads over Juliet's speech will be inclined to think, or even to be altogether satisfied, that the whole tenor of it is optative. With respect to the calling night a run-away, one might surely ask how it can possibly be so termed in an abstract point of view?
Is it a greater fugitive than the morning, the noon, or the evening? Mr. Stevens lays great stress on Shak-speare's having before called the night a run-away in the Merchant of Venice:—

'For the close night doth play the run-away.'

But there it was already far advanced, and might therefore with great propriety he said to play the run-away; here it was not begun. The same remark will apply to the passage cited from the Fair Maid of the Exchange.
Where then is this run-away to be found? or can it be Juliet herself? She who has just been secretly married to the enemy of her parents might with some propriety be termed a run-away from her duty; but she had not abandoned her native pendency. She therefore invokes the night to veil those rites which she was about to perform, and to bring her Romeo to her arms in darkness and silence. The lines that immediately follow may be thought to favour this interpretation; and the whole scene may possibly bring to the reader's recollection an interesting part in the beautiful story of Cupid and Psyche.—Douce.

9 So in Marlowe's Hero and Leander:—

'—dark night is Cupid's day.'

Milton, in his Comus, might have been indebted to Shakespeare:—

'Virtue can see to do what virtue would

By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk.'

10 Civil is grave, solemn.

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenhoods:
Hood my unmann'd blood bating in my cheeks,¹
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,

Think true love acted, simple modesty.
Come, night!—Come, Romeo! come, thou day in night!

For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow upon a raven's back.—
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,²

Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish³ sun.—
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it; and, though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child, that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse,

Enter Nurse, with Cords.

And she brings news: and every tongue, that speaks
But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.— Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there, the cords,

That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords.
[Throws them down.]

Jul. Ah me! what news! why dost thou wring thy hands?

Nurse. Ah, well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's dead!

We are undone, lady, we are undone!
Alack the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead!

Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot:—O, Romeo! Romeo!
Who ever would have thought it?—Romeo!

Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me
thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I,
And that bare vowel I shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice:⁴
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that make thee answer, I.
If he be slain, say—I; or if not, no:
Brief sounds determine of my weal, or woe.

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,—
God save the mark!⁵—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,
All in gore blood; I swooned at the sight.

Jul. O, break, my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once!

To prison, eyes! ne'er look on liberty!
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here;
And thou, and Romeo, press one heavy bier!

Nurse. O, Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had!
O, courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this, that blows so contrary?
Is Romeo slaughter'd: and is Tybalt dead?

1 These are terms of falconry. An unmann'd hawk is one that is not brought to endure company. Bating is fluttering or beating the wings as striving to fly away.

2 'Why here walk I, in the black brow of night,' King John.

3 Milton had this speech in his thoughts when he wrote Il Penseroso:—

'Hide me from day's garish eye.'
Hence also 'Till civil-suited morn appear.' Garish is gaudy, glittering.

4 In Shakspeare's time the affirmative particle ay was usually written I, and here it is necessary to retain the old spelling.

5 See what is said of the basilisk, King Henry VI. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

6 See Othello, Act I. Sc. 1.

My dear-lov'd cousin, and my dearer lord?—
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom!
For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished;
Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banished.

Jul. O, God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's
blood?

Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did.

Jul. O, serpent heart, hid with a flow'ring face!⁷

Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?

Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical!

Dove feather'd raven! wolfish-ravens lamb!

Despised substance of divinest show!

Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st,

A damned saint, an honourable villain!—

O, nature! what hadst thou to do in hell,

When thou didst bower the spirit of a fiend

In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,

So fairly bound? O, that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous palace!

Nurse. There's no trust,

No faith, no honesty in men; all perjur'd,

All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.—

Ah, where's my man? give me some acqua vita:—

These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me old.
Shame come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue,

For such a wish! he was not born to shame:

Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;

For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd

Sole monarch of the universal earth.

O, what a beast was I to chide at him.

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?
Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth⁸ thy
name,

When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled it?—

But wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin?

That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband:

Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring;

Your tributary drops belong to woe,

Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.⁹

My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain;

And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my husband:

All this is comfort: Wherefore weep I, then?—

Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's death,

That murder'd me; I would forget it fain;

But, O! it presses to my memory,

Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds;
Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banished:

That—banished, that one word—banished,

Hath slain ten thousand Tybalts.¹⁰ Tybalt's death

Was wo enough, if it had ended there:

Or,—if sour wo delights in fellowship,

And needly will be rank'd with other griefs,—

Why follow'd not, when she said—Tybalt's dead,

Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,

Which modern¹¹ lamentation might have mov'd?

But, with a rear-ward following Tybalt's death

Romeo is banished,—to speak that word,

Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,

All slain, all dead:—Romeo is banished,—

There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,

7 The same image occurs in Machbeth:—
'— look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it.'

The succeeding line has its parallel in King John:—

'Rash, inconsiderate, fiery volunaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens.'

8 To smooth is to flatter, to speak fair; it is here metaphorically used for to mitigate or assuage the asperity of censure with which Romeo's name would be now mentioned.

9 So in The Tempest:—

'— I am a fool
To weep at what I'm glad of.'

10 I. e. is worse than the loss of ten thousand Tybalts.

11 Modern is trite, common. So in As You Like It:—
'Full of wise saws, and modern instances'

In that word's death; no words can that wo sound.—
Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?

Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corse:
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears? mine shall be spent,

When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.
Take up those cords:—Poor ropes, you are beguil'd,
Both you and I; for Romeo is exil'd:

He made you for a highway to my bed;
But I, a maid, die maiden-widowed.

Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wedding bed;
And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead.

Nurse. Hie to your chamber: I'll find Romeo
To comfort you:—I wot well where he is.

Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night;
I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence's cell.

Jul. O, find him! give this ring to my true knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR LAURENCE AND ROMEO.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful
man;

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom?

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company:
I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince's doom?

Fri. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his lips,
Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha! banishment? be merciful, say—death:
For exile hath more terror in his look,

Much more than death: do not say—banishment.
Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished:

Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.
Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,

But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence-banished is banish'd from the world,

And world's exile is death:—then banishment
Is death misterr'd: calling death banishment,

Thou cut'st my head off with a golden axe,
And smil'st upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O, deadly sin! O, rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,

Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banishment:

This is dear mercy,¹ and thou seest it not.
Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is here,

Where Juliet lives:² and every cat and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,

Live here in heaven, and may look on her,
But Romeo may not.—More validity,³

More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo: they may seize

On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips;

Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush as thinking their own kisses sin;

But Romeo may not; he is banished:
Flies may do this, when I from this must fly

They are free men, but I am banished.
And say'st thou yet, that exile is not death?

Hadst thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-ground knife,
No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,

But—banished—to kill me; banished?

1. The quarto, 1597, reads 'This is mere mercy,' i. e. absolute mercy.

2 From this and the foregoing speech of Romeo, Dryden has borrowed in his beautiful paraphrase of Chaucer's Palamon and Arcite:—

'Heaven is not but where Emily abides,
And where she's absent all is hell besides.'

3 Validity is again employed to signify worth, value, in the first scene of King Lear. By courtship, courtesy, courtly behaviour is meant.

O friar, the damned use that word in hell;
Howlings attend it: How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd,

To mangle me with that word—banishment?
Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.

Rom. O, thou wilt speak again of banishment.

Fri. I'll give thee armour to keep off that word;
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,⁴

To comfort thee, though thou art banished.
Rom. Yet banished?—Hang up philosophy!

Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom:

It helps not, it prevails not, talk no more.
Fri. O, then I see that madmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.⁵
Rom. Thou canst not speak of what thou dost not feel:

Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,

An hour but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,

Then might'st thou speak, then might'st thou tear
thy hair,

And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Fri. Arise; one knocks; good Romeo, hide thyself. [Knocking within.]

Rom. Not I; unless the breath of heart-sick groans,

Mistlike, infold me from the search of eyes. [Knocking.]

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—Who's there?—
Romeo, arise;

Thou wilt be taken:—Stay awhile: stand up;
[Knocking.]

Run to my study:—By and by:—God's will!
What willfulness is this?—I come, I come.

Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will?

Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand;

I come from Lady Juliet.
Fri. Welcome, then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O, holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress' case,
Just in her case!

Fri. O, woful sympathy!
Piteous predicament!

Nurse. Even so lies she,
Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering:—

Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man:
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;

Why should you fall into so deep an O?
Rom. Nurse!

Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir!—Well, death's the end of all.

Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?
Doth she not think me an old murderer,

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood remov'd but little from her own?

Where is she? and how doth she? and what says
My conceal'd lady⁶ to our cancell'd love?

4 So in the poem of Romeo and Juliet, the Friar says:—

'Virtue is always thrall to troubles and annoy,
But wisdom in adversity finds cause of quiet joy.'

5 The same phrase, and with the same meaning, occurs in The Winter's Tale:—

'— can he speak? hear?
Know man from man? dispute his own estate?'⁷

i. e. is he able to talk over his own affairs, or the present state he is in?

6 The epithet conceal'd is to be understood, not of the person, but of the condition of the lady; so that

Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;

And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then falls down again.

Rom. As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murder'd her kinsman.—O, tell me, friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion. [Drawing his Sword.]

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy form cries out, thou art;
Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast:¹
Unseemly woman, in a seeming man!
Or ill beseeching beast, in seeming both!
Thou hast amaz'd me: by my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself?
And slay thy lady too that lives in thee,
By doing damned hate upon thyself;
Why rail'st thou on thy birth,² the heaven, and earth?

Since, birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet
In thee at once; which thou at once would'st lose.
Fie, fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like a usurer, abound'st in all,
And usest none in that true use indeed
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.
Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man:³
Thy dear love, sworn, but hollow perjury,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish:
Thy wit that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,⁴
Is set on fire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence.⁵
What, rouse thee, man! thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;
There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou slew'st Tybalt; there art thou happy too:
The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend,
And turns it to exile; there art thou happy:
A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;
But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;
Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.—
Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;

the sense is, 'My lady, whose being so, together with our marriage which made her so, is concealed from the world.'

1 Shakspeare has here followed the poem:—

'Art thou, quoth he, a man? thy shape saith, so thou art,
Thy crying and thy weeping eyes denote a woman's heart.'

For mainly reason is quite from off thy mind outchased,
And in her stead affections lewd, and fancies highly placed;

So that I stood in doubt, this hour at the least,
If thou a man or woman wert, or else a brutish beast.'

2 Romeo has not here railed on his birth, &c. though in his interview with the Friar, as described in the poem, he is made to do so. Shakspeare copied the remonstrance of the Friar, without reviewing the former part of this scene. He has in other places fallen into a similar inaccuracy, by sometimes following and sometimes deserting his original. The lines from Why rail'st thou on my birth, &c. to thy own defence, are not in the first copy; they are formed on a passage in the poem.

And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
Romeo is coming.⁶

Nurse. O, Lord, I could have staid here all the night,

To hear good counsel: O, what learning is!—
My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.

Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.

Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir:
Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late.

[Exit Nurse.]

Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this!

Fri. Go hence: Good night! and here stands all your state;⁷

Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the break of day disguis'd from hence
Sojourn in Mantua; I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify from time to time

Every good hap to you, that chances here:
Give me thy hand; 'tis late: farewell: good night.

Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me,
It were a grief, so brief to part with thee:
Farewell. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, and PARIS.

Cap. Things have fall'n out, sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter:
Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
And so did I;—Well, we were born to die.—
'Tis very late, she'll not come down to-night:
I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo:
Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.

La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow:

To-night she's mew'd up to her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate⁸ tender
Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; nay more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love;
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But, soft; what day is this?

Par. Monday, my lord.

Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon,

O' Thursday let it be;—O' Thursday, tell her,

She shall be married to this noble earl:—

Will you be ready? do you like this haste?

We'll keep no great ado;—a friend, or two:—

For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,

It may be thought we held him carelessly,

Being our kinsman, if we revel much:

Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,

And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone!—O' Thursday be it, then:—

3 So in King Richard II. Act v. Sc. 3:—

'And thy abundant goodness shall excuse

This deadly blot in thy digressing son.'

And in Barnabe Riche's Farewell:—'Knowing that you should otherwise have used me than you have, you should have digressed, and swerved from your kind.'

4 To understand the force of this allusion, it should be remembered that the ancient English soldiers, using match-locks, instead of locks with flints, as at present, were obliged to carry a lighted match hanging at their belts, very near to the wooden flask in which they carried their powder. The same allusion occurs in Humour's Ordinary, an old collection of English Epigrams:—

'When she his flask and touch-box set on fire,

And till this hour the burning is not out.'

5 And thou torn to pieces with thine own weapons.

6 Much of this speech has also been added since the first edition.

7 The whole of your fortune depends on this.

8 Desperate means only bold, adventurous, as if he had said in the vulgar phrase, I will speak a bold word, and venture to promise you my daughter.—Johnson.

'Witness this desperate tender of mine honour.'

Weakest goes to the Wall. .606.

Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.—
Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me, it is so very late, that we May call it early by and by:—Good night.¹

[Exeunt.]SCENE IV. Juliet's Chamber.² Enter ROMEO and JULIET.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierc'd the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree:³
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountain tops;
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Jul. Yon light is not daylight, I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,⁴
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.⁵

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say, yon gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads;
I have more care to stay, than will to go;—
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—
How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is, hie hence, be gone, away:
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and unpleasing sharps.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division;⁶
This doth not so, for she divideth us:
Some say, the lark and loathed toad chang'd eyes;⁷
O, now I would they had chang'd voices too!
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
Hunting thee hence with hunts-up⁸ to the day.
O, now be gone; more light and light it grows.

Rom. More light and light?—more dark and dark our woes.

1 The latter part of this scene is a good deal varied from the first quarto.

2 The stage direction in the first edition is, 'Enter Romeo and Juliet at a Window.' In the second quarto, 'Enter Romeo and Juliet aloft.' They appeared, probably, in the balcony which was erected on the old English stage. See Malone's Account of the Ancient Theatres, in vol. iii. of Boswell's edition of Shakspeare.

3 This is not merely a poetical supposition. It is observable that the nightingale, if undisturbed, sits and sings upon the same tree for many weeks together. [As almost all birds sing only during the period of incubation, this may be accounted for; the male bird sings near where the female is sitting.] What Eustathius has observed relative to a fig-tree mentioned by Homer, in his twelfth Odyssey, may be applied to the passage before us.—These particularities, which seem of no consequence, have a very good effect in poetry, as they give the relation an air of truth and probability. For what can induce a poet to mention such a tree, if the tree were not there in reality?—Steevens.

4 Compare Sidney's Arcadia, 13th edition, p. 109:—'The moon, then full, (not thinking scorn to be a torch-bearer to such beauty,) guided her steps.'

5 The quarto, 1597, reads:—
'Then stay awhile, thou shalt not go [so] soon.'
The succeeding speech, I think, (says Mr. Boswell,) is better in the same copy:—

'Let me stay here, let me be ta'en, and die;
If thou wilt have it so, I am content.
I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye,
It is the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;
I'll say it is the nightingale that beats
The vaulty heaven so far above our heads,
And not the lark, the messenger of morn;
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so—
What says my love? let's talk, 'tis not yet day.'

6 A division, in music, is a variation in melody upon some given fundamental harmony.

—grataque feminis
Imbelli cithara carmina dividens.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam!

Jul. Nurse?

Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to your chamber:

The day is broke; be wary, look about.

[Exit Nurse.]

Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend.

[ROMEO descends.]

Jul. Art thou gone so? my love! my lord! my friend!

I must hear from thee every day i' the hour,

For in a minute there are many days:

O! by this count I shall be much in years,⁹

Ere I again behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity

That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.

Jul. O, think'st thou, we shall ever meet again?

Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve

For sweet discourses in our time to come.

Jul. O, God! I have an ill-divining soul.¹⁰

Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:

Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.

Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:

Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu! adieu!

[Exit ROMEO.]

Jul. O, fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle:

If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him

That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle, fortune;

For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long,

But send him back.

La. Cap. [Within.] Ho, daughter! are you up?

Jul. Who is't that calls? is it my lady mother?

Is she not down so late, or up so early?

What unaccustom'd cause procures¹¹ her hither?

Enter LADY CAPULET

La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?

Jul. Madam, I am not well.

La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death?

What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?

An if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him live;

Therefore, have done: Some grief shows much of love:

But much of grief shows still some want of wit.

7 The toad having very fine eyes, and the lark very ugly ones, was the occasion of a common saying, that the toad and the lark had chang'd eyes. This tradition was expressed in a rustic rhyme:—

'To heav'n I'd fly,

But that the toad beguild me of mine eye.'

The sense of the passage is, the lark, they say, has chang'd eyes with the toad, and now I would they had chang'd voices too, since the lark's song serves but to separate us. The croak of the toad would have been no indication of the appearance of day, and consequently no signal for her lover's departure.

8 The hunts-up was originally a tune played to wake sportsmen, and call them together. It was a common burthen of hunting ballads. Puttenham says that one Gray grew into good estimation with the Duke of Somerset for making certain merry ballads, whereof one chiefly was the hunts up, the hunts up. One of these ballads is given by Mr. Douce, in his Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 192. According to Cotgrave, the Reveille or morning song to a new married woman, was called the hunts up. So Drayton, in his Polyolbion—

'But hunts up to the morn, the feather'd sylvans sing.
And in his third Eclogue:—

'Time plays the hunts up to thy sleepy head.'

9 'Illa ego quæ fueram te decedente puella,

Protrinus ut redeas, facta videbor anus.'

Ovid, Epist. I.

10 This miserable prescience of futurity I have always regarded as a circumstance peculiarly beautiful. The same kind of warning from the mind, Romeo seems to have been conscious of on his going to the entertainment at the house of Capulet:—

'My mind misgives me,
Some consequence yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
From this night's revels.'

Steevens.

11 Procures for brings.

Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.

La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend

Which you weep for.

Jul. Feeling so the loss,

I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.

La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death,

As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.

Jul. What villain, madam?

La. Cap. That same villain, Romeo.

Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder.

God pardon him! I do with all my heart;

And yet no man, like he, doth grieve my heart.

La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.

Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.

'Would, none but I might venge my cousin's death!

La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not:

Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,—

Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,—

That shall bestow on him so sure a draught,¹

That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:

And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.

Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied

With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—

Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd:—

Madam, if you could find out but a man

To bear a poison, I would temper it;

That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,

Soon sleep in quiet.—O, how my heart abhors

To hear him nam'd,—and cannot come to him,—

To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt

Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him!

La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.

Jul. And joy comes well in such a needful time:

What are they, I beseech your ladyship?

La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father, child;

One, who, to put thee from thy heaviness,

Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,

That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.

Jul. Madam, in happy time,² what day is that?

La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn,

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county³ Paris, at Saint Peter's church,
Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a joyful bride.

I wonder at this haste; that I must wed

Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.

¹ 'Juliet's equivocations are rather too artful for a mind disturbed by the loss of a new lover.'—Johnson.

² Thus the first quarto. The subsequent quartos and the folio less intelligibly read:—

'Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram.'

³ A la bonne heure. This phrase was interjected when the hearer was not so well pleased as the speaker. —Johnson. Bishop Lowth uses it in his Letter to Warburton, p. 101:—'And may I not hope then for the honour of your lordship's animadversions? In good time: when the candid examiner understands Latin a little better; and when your lordship has a competent knowledge of Hebrew.'

⁴ County, of countie, was the usual term for an earl in Shakespeare's time. Paris is in this play first styled a young earle. So Baret, 'a countie or an earle, comes un comte,' and 'a countie or cardome, comitatus.' Fairfax very frequently uses the word.

⁵ Thus the quarto 1597. The quarto 1599, and the folio, read 'the earth doth drizzle dew, which is philosophically true; and so perhaps the poet wrote, for in The Rape of Lucrece he says:—

'But as the earth doth weep, the sun bring set.'

Malone.

Stevens adds:—'When our author, in A Midsummer Night's Dream, says, "And when she [i. e. the moon] weeps, weeps every little flower," he only means that every little flower is moistened with dew, as if with tears; and not that the flower itself drizzles dew. This

I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and when I do, I swear,
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,
Rather than Paris:—These are news, indeed!

La. Cap. Here comes your father; tell him so yourself,

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter CAPULET and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew; But for the sunset of my brother's son,
It rains downright.—

How now, a conduit, girl? what, still in tears?

Ever more showering? In one little body

Thou counterfeit'st a bark, a sea, a wind:

For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,

Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,

Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy sighs,

Who,—raging with thy tears, and they with them,—

Without a sudden calm, will overset

Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife?

Have you deliver'd to her our decree?

La. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you thanks.

I would, the fool were married to her grave!

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you, wife.

How! will she none? doth she not give us thanks?

Is she not proud? doth she not count her blessing,

Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought

So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have;

Proud can I never be of what I hate;

But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Cap. How now! how now, chop-logic! What is this?

Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you not;—

And yet not proud;—Mistress minion, you,

Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,

But settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,

Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.

Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage!

You tallow-face!¹

La. Cap. Fie, fie! what, are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,

Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!

I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thursday,

Or never after look me in the face:

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me:

My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us blessing,

That God had sent us but this only child;

But now I see this one is one too much, passage sufficiently explains how the earth, in the quotation from The Rape of Lucrece, may be said to weep.' That Shakespeare thought it was the air, and not the earth, that drizzled dew, is evident from many passages in his works. So in King John:—

'Before the dew of evening fall.'

⁶ The same image, which was in frequent use with Shakespeare's contemporaries, occurs in the poem of Romeus and Juliet more than once:—

'His sighs are stopp'd, and stopp'd is the conduit of his tears.'

⁷ Capulet, as Stevens observes, uses this as a nickname. The hyphen is wanting in the old copy. 'Chop-logic' is he that when his master rebuketh his servaunt for his defaults, he will give him xx words for one, or elles he will bydde the devyls paternoster in scyence.—The xxiij Orders of Knaves, bk. 1.

⁸ Such was the indelicacy of the age of Shakespeare, that authors were not contented only to employ these terms of abuse in their own original performances, but even felt no reluctance to introduce them in their versions of the most chaste and elegant of the Greek or Roman poets. Stanyhurst, the translator of Virgil, in 1582, makes Dido call Aeneas hedge-brat, cullion, and tar-breech, in the course of one speech. Nay, in the interlude of The Repentance of Mary Magdalene, 1567, she says to one of her attendants:—

'Horeson, I beshrewe your heart, are you here?'

And that we have a curse in having her :

Out on her, hiding !¹

Nurse.

God in heaven bless her !—

You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom ? hold your tongue,

Good prudence ; smatter with your gossips, go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O, God ye good den !

Nurse. May not one speak ?

Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool !

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,

For here we need it not.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread ! it makes me mad ; Day, night, late, early,

At home, abroad, alone, in company,

Waking, or sleeping, still my care hath been

To have her match'd : and having now provided

A gentleman of princely parentage,

Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,

Stuff'd, (as they say,) with honourable parts,

Proportion'd as one's heart could wish a man,—

And then to have a wretched puling fool,

A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,

To answer—*I'll not wed, I cannot love,*²

I am too young—I pray you, pardon me ;—

But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you :

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me ;

Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.

Thursday is near ; lay hand on heart, advise ;

An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend ;

An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die i' the streets,

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,

Nor what is mine shall never do thee good :

Trust to't, bethink you, I'll not be forsworn. [Exit.]

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,

That sees into the bottom of my grief ?

O, sweet my mother, cast me not away !

Delay this marriage for a month, a week ;

Or, if you do not, make my bridal bed

In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word ;

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee. [Exit.]

Jul. O, God !—O, nurse ! how shall this be prevented ?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven ;

How shall that faith return again to earth,

Unless that husband send it me from heaven

By leaving earth ?—comfort me, counsel me.—

Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagems

Upon so soft a subject as myself ?—

What say'st thou ? hast thou not a word of joy ?

Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse.

'Faith, here 'tis : Romeo

Is banish'd ; and all the world to nothing,

That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you ;

Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.

Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,

I think it best you married with the county.

O, he's a lovely gentleman !³

Romeo's a dishclout to him ; an eagle, madam,

Hath not so green,⁴ so quick, so fair an eye,

As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,

² There is a passage in the old play of Wily Beguiled, pointed out by Malone, so nearly resembling this, that one poet must have copied from the other. Wily Beguiled was on the stage before 1596, being mentioned by Nashe in his Have with You to Saffron Walden, printed in that year.

³ The character of the Nurse exhibits a just picture of those whose actions have no principles for their foundation. She has been unfaithful to the trust reposed in her by Capulet, and is ready to embrace any expedient that offers, to avert the consequences of her first infidelity. The picture is not, however, an original, the nurse in the poem exhibits the same readiness to accommodate herself to the present conjuncture. Sir John Vanbrugh, in The Relapse, has copied, in this respect, the character of his nurse from Shakespeare.

⁴ Perhaps Chaucer has given to Emetrius, in The Knight's Tale, eyes of the same colour :—
'His nose was high, his eyin bright citryn.'

I think you are happy in this second match,

For it excels your first : or if it did not,

Your first is dead : or 'twere as good he were,

As living here, and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart ?

Nurse.

From my soul too ;

Or else beshrew them both.

Jul.

Amen !

Nurse.

To what ?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.

Go in ; and tell my lady I am gone,

Having displeas'd my father, to Laurence' cell,

To make confession, and to be absolv'd.

Nurse. Marry, I will ; and this is wisely done.

[Exit.]

Jul. Ancient damnation ! O, most wicked fiend !

Is it more sin—to wish me thus forsworn,

Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue

Which she hath prais'd him with above compare

So many thousand times ?—Go, counsellor ;

Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.—

I'll to the friar, to know his remedy ;

If all else fail, myself have power to die. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR LAURENCE AND PARIS.

Fri. On Thursday, sir ? the time is very short.

Par. My father Capulet will have it so ;

And I am nothing slow, to slack his haste.¹

Fri. You say, you do not know the lady's mind ;

Uneven is the course, I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death,

And therefore have I little talk'd of love ;

For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous,

That she doth give her sorrow so much sway ;

And, in his wisdom, hastes our marriage,

To stop the inundation of her tears ;

Which, too much minded by herself alone,

May be put from her by society :

Now do you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. I would, I knew not why it should be slow'd.²

[Aside.]

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter JULIET.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife !

Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri.

That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father ?

Jul. To answer that, were to confess to you.

Par. Do not deny to him, that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you, that I love him.

Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.

Jul. If I do, it will be of more price,

Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd with tears.

i. e. of the hue of an unripe lemon or citron. Again, in The Two Noble Kinsmen, by Fletcher and Shakespeare :—

'——— oh vouchsafe

With that thy rare green eye,' &c.

⁵ The meaning of Paris is clear, he does not wish to restrain Capulet, or to delay his own marriage ; there is nothing of slowness in me, to induce me to slacken or abate his haste : but the words the poet has given him import the reverse, and seem rather to mean I am not backward in restraining his haste. I endeavour to retard him as much as I can. The poet has hastily fallen into similar inadvertencies elsewhere. In the first edition the line ran :—

'And I am nothing slack to slow his haste.'

⁶ To slow and to foreslow were anciently in common use as verbs :—

'——— will you o'erflow

The fields, thereby my march to slow.'

Jul. The tears have got small victory by that ;
For it was bad enough before their spite.

Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that report.

Jul. That is no slander, sir, that is a truth ;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.—

Are you at leisure, holy father, now ;

Or shall I come to you at evening mass ?¹

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now :
My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Par. God shield, I should disturb devotion :—

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you :

Till then, adieu ! and keep this holy kiss.

[Exit PARIS.]

Jul. O, shut the door ! and when thou hast done so,

Come weep with me ; Past hope, past cure, past help !

Fri. Ah, Juliet, I already know thy grief ;

It strains me past the compass of my wits :

I hear thou must, and nothing must prorogue it,

On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, Friar, that thou hear'st of this,
Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it :

If in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,

Do thou but call my resolution wise,

And with this knife I'll help it presently.

God join d my heart and Romeo's, thou our hands ;

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,

Shall be the label to another deed,²

Or my true heart with treacherous revolt

Turn to another, this shall slay them both :

Therefore, out of thy long-experienc'd time,

Give me some present counsel ; or, behold

'Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife

Shall play the umpire,³ arbitrating that

Which the commission⁴ of thy years and art

Could to no issue of true honour bring.

Be not so long to speak ; I long to die,

If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

Fri. Hold, daughter ; I do spy a kind of hope,

Which craves as desperate an execution

As that is desperate which we would prevent.

If, rather than to marry county Paris,

Thou hadst the strength of will to slay thyself ;

Then is it likely, thou wilt undertake

A thing like death to chide away this shame,

That cop'st with death himself to scape from it ;

And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O, bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,

From off the battlements of yonder tower ;

Or walk in thievish ways ; or bid me lurk

Where serpents are ; chain me with roaring bears ;

Or shut me nightly⁵ in a charnel-house,

1 Juliet means vespers, there is no such thing as evening mass. Masses, (as Fynes Moryson observes) are only sung in the morning, and when the priests are fasting.

2 The seals of deeds formerly were appended on distinct slips or labels affixed to the deed. Hence in King Richard II. the Duke of York discovers a covenant which his son the Duke of Aumerle had entered into by the depending seal.

3 i. e. shall decide the struggle between me and my distress.

4 Commission may be here used for authority : but it is more probable that commission is the word intended.

5 The quarto 1597 reads—

'Or chain me to some steepy mountain's top,

Where roaring bears and savage lions roam.'

In the text the 4to. of 1599 is followed, except that it has

'or hide me nightly.'

6 Thus the 4to 1599 and the folio : the 4to. 1597 reads,

I think, with more spirit :—

'To keep myself a faithful unstain'd wife

'To my dear lord, my dearest Romeo.' Boswell.

7 Instead of the remainder of this scene the 4to 1597 has only these four lines :—

'And when thou art laid in thy kindred's vault,

I'll send in haste to Mantua to thy lord ;

And he shall come and take thee from thy grave.

Jul. Friar, I go ; be sure thou send for my dear

Romeo.'

O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks, and yellow chapless-skulls,
Or bid me go into a new made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud ;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me mo
tremble ;

And I will do it without fear or doubt,

To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love.⁶

Fri. Hold, then ; go home, be merry, give consent

To marry Paris : Wednesday is to-morrow ;

To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,

Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber :

Take thou this phial, being then in bed,

And this distilled liquor drink thou off ;

When presently, through all thy veins shall run

A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize

Each vital spirit ; for no pulse shall keep

His natural progress, but surcease to beat :

No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou liv'st ;

The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade

To paly ashes ; thy eyes' windows fall,

Like death, when he shuts up the day of life ;

Each part depriv'd of supple government,

Shall, stiff, and stark, and cold, appear like death :

And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death

Thou shalt remain full two and forty hours,⁷

And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.

Now when the bridegroom in the morning comes

To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead :

Then (as the manner of our country is)

In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,⁸

Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,

Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.

In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,

Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift ;

And hither shall he come ; and he and I

Will watch thy waking, and that very night

Shall Romeo hear thee hence to Mantua.

And this shall free thee from this present shame ;

If no unconstant toy,⁹ nor womanish fear,

Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, give me ! O, tell me not of fear.

Fri. Hold ; get you gone, be strong and prospe-rours

In this resolve : I'll send a friar with speed

To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength ! and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, Nurse, and Servant.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ.—

[Exit Servant.]

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.¹⁰

2 Serv. You shall have none ill, sir ; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.¹¹

8 The Italian custom here alluded to, of carrying the dead body to the grave richly dressed, and with the face uncovered (which is not mentioned by Painter,) Shakespeare found particularly described in The Tragical History of Romeus and Juliet :—

'Another use there is, that whosoever dies, Borne to the church, with open face upon the bier he lies,

In wonted weed attir'd, not wrapt in winding sheet.'

Thus also Ophelia's Song, in Hamlet :—

'They bore him bare-faced on the bier.'

9 If no fickle freak, no light caprice, no change of fancy, hinder the performance. The expressions are from the poem.

10 Capulet has in a former scene said :—

'— We'll keep no great ado :—

'— we'll have some half a dozen friends.'

The poet has made him alter his mind strangely, or had forgotten what he had made him say before. (See Act iii. Sc. iv.) Malone observes that the former scene was of the poet's own invention, and that he here recollected the poem :—

'— he myndes to make for him a costly feast.'

11 This adage is found in Puttenham's Art of English Poesie, 1589 :—

'As the olde cocke crowes so doeth the chicke :

A bad cooke that cannot his owne fingers lick'

Cap. How canst thou try them so?

2 Serv. Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he, that cannot lick his fingers, goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone.— [Exit Servant.]
We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time.—

What, is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence?

Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her:

A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

Enter JULIET.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shrift¹ with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong? where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the sin Of disobedient opposition

To you, and your behests; and am enjoin'd

By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here,

And beg your pardon:—Pardon, I beseech you!

Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the county: go tell him of this; I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;

And gave him what becom'd² love I might,

Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on't; this is well,—stand up:

This is as't should be.—Let me see the county;

Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.—

Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,

All our whole city is much bound to him.³

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,

To help me sort such needful ornaments

As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her:—we'll to church to-morrow. [Exit JULIET and Nurse.]

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision;

'Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush! I will stir about,

And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife:

Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her;

I'll not to bed to-night:—let me alone;

I'll play the housewife for this once.—What, ho!

They are all forth: Well, I will walk myself

To county Paris, to prepare him up

Against to-morrow: my heart is wondrous light,

Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.
[Exit.]

SCENE III. Juliet's Chamber. Enter JULIET and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best:—But, gentle nurse,

I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night;

For I have need of many orisons

To move the heavens to smile upon my state,

Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter LADY CAPULET.

La. Cap. What, are you busy? do you need my help?

1 i. e. confession.

2 Becomed for becoming; one participle for another, a frequent practice with Shakespeare.

3 Thus the folio and the quartos 1599 and 1609: The oldest quarto reads, perhaps more grammatically:—

'All our whole city is much bound unto.'

4 This speech received considerable additions after the first copy was published.

5 This stage direction has been supplied by the modern editors. The quarto of 1597 reads:—'Knife, lie thou there.'

'Daggers, or, as they were more commonly called, knives, (says Mr. Gifford,) were worn at all times by every woman in England; whether they were so worn in Italy, Shakespeare, I believe, never inquired, and I cannot tell.—Works of Ben Jonson, vol. v. p. 221.

6 This idea was probably suggested to the poet by his native place. The charnel at Stratford-upon-Avon is a very large one, and perhaps contains a greater number

Jul. No, madam; we have cull'd such necessaries

As are behoveful for our state to-morrow;

So please you, let me now be left alone,

And let the nurse this night sit up with you;

For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,

In this so sudden business.

La. Cap.

Good night!

Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.

[Exit LADY CAPULET and Nurse.]

Jul. Farewell!⁴—God knows, when we shall meet again.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,

That almost freezes up the heat of life:

I'll call them back again to comfort me:—

Nurse!—What should she do here?

My dismal scene I needs must act alone.—

Come, phial.—

What if this mixture do not work at all?

Must I of force be married to the county?—

No, no;—this shall forbid it:—lie thou there.—
[Laying down a Dagger.]

What if it be a poison, which the friar

Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead;

Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,

Because he married me before to Romeo?

I fear, it is: and yet, methinks, it should not,

For he hath still been tried a holy man:

I will not entertain so bad a thought.—

How if, when I am laid into the tomb,

I wake before the time that Romeo

Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point!

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,

To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,

And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?

Or, if I live, is it not very like,

The horrible conceit of death and night,

Together with the terror of the place,—

As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,

Where, for these many hundred years, the bones

Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;⁵

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,

Lies fest'ring⁶ in his shroud; where, as they say,

At some hours in the night spirits resort;—

Alack, alack! is it not like, that I,

So early waking,—what with loathsome smells,

And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth,

That living mortals, hearing them, run mad;⁷—

O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,⁸

Environd with all these hideous fears?

And madly play with my forefathers' joints?

And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?

And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,

As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?

O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost

Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body

Upon a rapier's point:—Stay, Tybalt, stay!

Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the Bed.]

SCENE IV. Capulet's Hall. Enter LADY CAPULET and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

of bones than are to be found in any other repository of the same kind in England.

7 To fester is to corrupt. So in King Edward III. 1599:—

'Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.'

This line also occurs in the ninety-fourth Sonnet of Shakespeare. The play of Edward III. has been ascribed to him.

8 The mandrake, (says Thomas Newton in his Herbal) has been idly represented as 'a creature having life, and engendered under the earth of the seed of some dead person that hath been convicted and put to death for some felonie or murder, and that they had the same in such dampish and funeral places where the salde convicted persons were buried,' &c. So in Webster's Duchess of Malfy, 1623:—

'I have this night digg'd up a mandrake,
And am grown mad with it.'

9 i. e. distracted.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.¹ [Exit Nurse.]

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd,
The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock:—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica:
Spare not for cost.

La. Cap. Go, go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed; 'faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.²

Cap. No, not a whit; What! I have watch'd ere
now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt³ in your time;
But I will watch you from such watching now.

[Exit LADY CAPULET.]

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!—Now, fellow,
What's there?

Enter Servants, with Spits, Logs, and Baskets.

Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what.

Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 Serv.]—
Sirrah, fetch drier logs;

Call Peter, he will show thee where they are.

2 Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit.]

Cap. 'Mass, and well said; A merry whoreson!
ha,
Thou shalt be logger-head.—Good faith, 'tis day:
The county will be here with music straight.

[Music within.]

For so he said he would. I hear him near:—

Nurse!—Wife!—what ho;—what, nurse, I say!

Enter Nurse.

Go, waken Juliet, go, and trim her up;
I'll go and chat with Paris:—Hie, make haste,
Make haste! the bridegroom he is come already:
Make haste, I say! [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Juliet's Chamber; JULIET on the Bed. Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress!—what, mistress!—Juliet!— fast, I warrant her, she:—
Why, lamb! why, lady;—he, you slug-a-bed!—
Why, love, I say!—madam! sweet-heart!—why, bride!

What, not a word?—you take your pennyworths
now;

Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,
The county Paris hath set up his rest.⁴
That you shall rest but little.—God forgive me, (Marry and amen!) how sound is she asleep!
I needs must wake her:—Madam, madam, madam!
Ay, let the county take you in your bed;
He'll fright you up, in faith.—Will it not be?
What, drest! and in your clothes! and down again!

1 The room were the pastry was made.

2 This speech, which in the old copies is attributed to the Nurse, should surely be given to Lady Capulet.—The Nurse would hardly call her lordly master a cot-quean, or reply to a speech addressed to her mistress. Beside that, she had been sent for spices, and is shortly after made to re-enter. I have therefore made the necessary change.

3 The animal called the mouse-hunt is the martin, which, being of the weasel tribe, prowls about in the night for its prey. 'Cat after kinde, good mouse-hunt,' is one of Heywood's proverbs.

4 Nashe, in his Terrors of the Night, quibbles in the same manner on this expression:—'You that are married and have wives of your owne, and yet hold too nere friendship with your neighbours, set up your rests, and that the night will be an ill neighbour to your rest, and that you shall have as little peace of minde as the rest.'

5 Shakspeare has here followed the old poem closely, without recollecting that he had made Capulet in this scene clamorous in his grief. In the poem Juliet's mother makes a long speech, but the old man utters not a word:—

I must needs wake you: Lady! lady! lady!
Alas! alas!—Help! help! my lady's dead!—
O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!—
Some aqua-vitæ, ho!—my lord! my lady!

Enter LADY CAPULET.

La. Cap. What noise is here?

Nurse. O, lamentable day!

La. Cap. What is the matter?

Nurse. Look, look! O, heavy day!

La. Cap. O, me, O, me!—my child, my only life,
Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!—
Help, help!—call help.

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.

Nurse. She's dead, deceas'd, she's dead; alack
the day!

La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead, she's dead.

Cap. Ha! let me see her:—Out, alas! she's cold;

Her blood is settled; and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated:
Death lies on her, like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.
Accurs'd time! unfortunate old man.

Nurse. O, lamentable day!

La. Cap. O, woful time!

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter FRIAR LAURENCE and PARIS, with Musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?

Cap. Ready to go, but never to return:
O, son, the night before thy wedding-day
Hath death lain with thy bride:—See, there she lies,

Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is my son-in-law, death is my heir;
My daughter he hath wedded! I will die,
And leave him all; life leaving, all is death's.

Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's face?

And doth it give me such a sight as this?

La. Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!

Most miserable hour, that e'er time saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!
But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.

Nurse. O, wo! O, woful, woful, woful day!
Most lamentable day! most woful day,

That ever, ever, I did yet behold!
O, day! O, day! O, day! O, hateful day!

Never was seen so black a day as this:
O, woful day, O, woful day!

Par. Beguil'd, divorced, wronged, spited, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee beguil'd,

'But more than all the rest the father's heart was so Smit with the heavy newe, and so shut up with sudden wo,

That he ne had the power his daughter to beweepe,
Ne yet to speak, but long is forc'd his tears and plaints to keep.'

6 Decker, in his Satiromastix, has the same thought more coarsely expressed:—

'Dead: she's death's bride; he hath her maidenhead.'

He has the same thought in his Wonderful Year:—

'Death rudely lay with her, and spoiled her of her maidenhead in spite of her husband.'

7 The quarto of 1597 continues the speech of Paris
thus:—

'And doth it now present such prodigies?

Accurs'd, unhappy, miserable man,

Forlorn, forsaken, destitute I am,

Born to the world to be a slave in it:

Distrest, remediless, unfortunate.

Oh, heavens! Oh, nature! wherefore did you make me

To live so vile, so wretched as I shall?

In the text the edition of 1599 is here followed. The Nurse's exclamatory speech is not in the first quarto.

By cruel cruel thee quite overthrow!—

O, love! O, life!—not life, but love in death!

Cap. Despis'd, distressed, hated, martyr'd, kill'd!

Uncomfortable time! why cam'st thou now

To murder murder our solemnity?—

O, child! O, child!—my soul, and not my child!

Dead art thou, dead!—alack! my child is dead;

And, with my child, my joys are buried!

Fri. Peace, ho, for shame! confusion's cure lives not

In these confusions. Heaven and yourself

Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,

And all the better is it for the maid:

Your part in her you could not keep from death;

But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.

The most you sought was—her promotion;

For 'twas your heaven, she should be advanc'd:

And weep ye now, seeing she is advanc'd,

Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?

O, in this love, you love your child so ill,

That you run mad, seeing that she is well:

She's not well married, that lives married long;

But she's best married, that dies married young.

Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary

On this fair corse; and, as the custom is,

In all her best array bear her to church:

For though fond nature bids us all lament,

Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,¹

Turn from their office to black funeral;

Our instruments, to melancholy bells;

Our wedding cheer, to a sad burial feast;²

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;

Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,

And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir, go you in,—and, madam, go with him;

And go, sir Paris;—every one prepare

To follow this fair corse unto her grave:

The heavens do lour upon you, for some ill;

Move them no more, by crossing their high will.

[Exeunt CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, PARIS, and Friar.]

1 Mus. 'Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.

Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah, put up; put up;

For, well you know, this is a pitiful case.

[Exit Nurse.]

1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter PETER.³

Pet. Musicians, O, musicians, Heart's ease, heart's ease; O, an you will have me live, play—heart's ease.

1 Mus. Why heart's ease?

Pet. O, musicians, because my heart itself plays

1 Instead of this and the following speeches the first quarto has only a couplet:—

'Let it be so; come, woful sorrow-mates,

Let us together taste this bitter fate.'

The enlarged text is formed upon the poem.

2 See Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

3 From the quarto of 1599 it appears that the part of Peter was originally performed by William Kempe.

4 This is the burden of the first stanza of A Pleasant

New Ballad of Two Lovers:—

'Hey hoe! my heart is full of woe.'

5 A dump was formerly the received term for a grave or melancholy strain in music, vocal or instrumental.

It also signified a kind of poetical elegy. A merry dump is no doubt a purposed absurdity put into the mouth of Master Peter. That it was a sad or dismal strain, perhaps sometimes for the sake of contrast and effect mixed up with livelier airs, appears from Cavendish's Metrical Visions, p. 17:—

'What is now left to help me in this case?

Nothing at all but dumpe in the dance,

Among dead men to tryppe on the trace.'

6 A pun is here intended. A gleekman, or glegman, is a minstrel. To give the gleek meant also to pass a jest upon a person, to make him appear ridiculous; a gleek being a jest or scoff.

7 'Dr. Percy thinks that the questions of Peter are designed as a ridicule on the forced and unnatural explanations given by us painful editors of ancient authors.'—Steevens.

—*My heart is full of woe.*⁴ O, play me some merry dump,⁵ to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we; 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then?

Mus. No.

Pet. I will then give it you soundly.

1 Mus. What will you give us?

Pet. No money, on my faith; but the gleek:⁶

I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then will I give you the serving-creature.

Pet. Then will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crotchets: I'll re you, I'll fa you; Do you note me?

1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

2 Mus. 'Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. Then have at you with my wit; I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger:—Answer me like men!⁷

When griping grief the heart doth wound,

And doleful dumps the mind oppress,

Then music with her silver sound⁸—

Why, silver sound? why, music with her silver sound? What say you, Simon Catling?⁹

1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Pet. Pretty! What say you, Hugh Rebeck?

2 Mus. I say—silver sound, because musicians sound for silver.

Pet. Pretty too!—What say you, James Sound-post?

3 Mus. 'Faith, I know not what to say.

Pet. O, I cry you mercy! you are the singer:

I will say for you. It is—music with her silver sound, because such fellows as you have seldom gold for sounding:—

Then music with her silver sound,

With speedy help doth lend redress.

[Exit, singing.]

1 Mus. What a pestilent knave is this same!

2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll in here;

tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Mantua. A Street. Enter ROMEO.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering eye of sleep,¹⁰

My dreams presage some joyful news at hand:

My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;

And, all this day, an unaccustom'd spirit

Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts.¹¹

I dreamt, my lady came and found me dead

(Strange dream! that gives a dead man leave to think;)

8 This is part of a song by Richard Edwards, to be found in the Paradice of Dainty Devices, fol. 31, b.

Another copy of this song is to be found in Percy's

Reliques of Ancient English Poetry.

9 This worthy takes his name from a small lutestring made of catgut. His companion the fiddler from an instrument of the same name mentioned by many of our old writers, and recorded by Milton as an instrument of mirth:—

'When the merry bells ring round,

And the joyful rebeck's sound.'

10 Thus the first quarto. The folio reads:—

'If I may trust the flattering truth of sleep.'

The sense appears to be, If I may repose any confidence in the flattering visions of the night. Otway reads:—

'If I may trust the flattery of sleep,

My dreams presage some joyful news at hand.'

11 'These three last lines are very gay and pleasing.

But why does Shakspeare give Romeo this involuntary cheerfulness just before the extremity of unhappiness?

Perhaps to show the vanity of trusting to those uncertain and casual exaltations or depressions, which many consider as certain foretokens of good and evil.'—John- son.

The poet has explained this passage a little further on:—

'How oft, when men are at the point of death,

Have they been merry? which their keepers call

A lightning before death.'

And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,¹
That I reviv'd, and was an emperor.
Ah, me! how sweet is love itself possess'd,
When but love's shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter BALTHASAR.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthasar?
Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?
How doth my lady? Is my father well?
How fares my Juliet? That I ask again;
For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill:
Her body sleeps in Capels' monument,²
And her immortal part with angels lives;
I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault,
And presently took post to tell it you;
O, pardon me for bringing these ill news,
Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it even so? then I defy you, stars!—
Thou know'st my lodging: get me ink and paper,
And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. Pardon me, sir, I will not leave you thus:
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiv'd;
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do:
Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter: get thee gone,
And hire those horses; I'll be with thee straight.

[Exit BALTHASAR.]

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means:—O, mischief! thou art swift
To enter in the thoughts of desperate men!
I do remember an apothecary,—
And hereabouts he dwells,—whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones:³
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins⁴
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scatter'd to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said—
And if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a caldif wretch would sell it him.
O, this same thought did but forerun my need;
And this same needy man must sell it me.

¹ Shakespeare seems to have remembered Marlowe's Hero and Leander, a poem that he has quoted in As You Like It:—

'By this sad Hero—

Viewing Leander's face, fell down and fainted;

He kiss'd her, and breath'd life into her lips,' &c.

² Shakespeare found Capel and Capulet used indiscriminately in the poem which was the groundwork of this tragedy.

³ See Sackville's description of misery in the Induction to the Mirror of Magistrates:—

'His face was leane and some deal plnde away,

And eke his hands consumed to the bones.'

⁴ We learn from Nashe's Have with You to Saffron Walden, 1596, that a stuffed alligator then made part of the furniture of an apothecary's shop:—'He made an anatomic of a rat, and after hanged her over his head, instead of an apothecary's crocodile or dried alligator.' Stevens was informed that formerly when an apothecary first engaged with his druggist, he was gratuitously furnished by him with these articles of show, which were then imported for that use only; and had met with the alligator, tortoise, &c. hanging up in the shop of an ancient apothecary at Limehouse, as well as in places more remote from the metropolis. See Hogarth's Marriage à la Mode, plate iii. It seems that the apothecaries dismissed their alligators, &c. sometime before the physicians parted with their ember-headed canes and solemn periwigs.

⁵ The quarto of 1597 reads:—

'Upon thy back hangs ragged miserie,
And starved famine dwelleth in thy cheeks.'

The quartos of 1599 and 1609:—

'Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes.'

As I remember, this should be the house;
Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.—
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man—I see, that thou art poor;

Hold, there is forty ducats; let me have
A dram of poison; such soon-speeding geer
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead;
And that the trunk may be discharg'd of breath
As violently, as hasty powder fir'd
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death, to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,
And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,⁵
Upon thy back hangs ragged misery,
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would despatch you straight.⁶

Rom. There is thy gold, worse poison to men's souls,

Doing more murders in this loathsome world,
Than these poor compounds that thou may'st not sell:
I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
Farewell; buy food, and get thyself in flesh.
Come, cordial, and not poison; go with me
To Juliet's grave, for there I must use thee.

[Exit Rom.]

SCENE II. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR JOHN.

John. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter FRIAR LAURENCE.

Lau. This same should be the voice of Friar John.—

Welcome from Mantua; What says Romeo?

Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

John. Going to find a barefoot brother out,

One of our order to associate me,⁷

Here in this city visiting the sick,

And finding him the searchers of the town,

Suspecting that we both were in a house

Where the infectious pestilence did reign,

⁶ Stevens thinks that Shakespeare may have remembered the following passage in the Pardoner's Tale of Chaucer, v. 12794:

'The Potecary answered, thou shalt have

A thing, as wisely God my soule save,

In all this world this n'is no creature,

That ete or dronke hath of this confection,

Not but the mounce of a corne of whete,

That he ne shall his lif anon forlete;

Ye, sterve he shall, and that in lesse while

Than thou wilt gon a pas not but a mile:

This poison is so strong and violent.'

⁷ Each friar had always a companion assigned him by the superior, when he asked leave to go out. In the Visitatio Notabilis de Seleborne, a curious record printed in White's Natural History of Selborne, Wykeham enjoins the canons not to go abroad without leave from the prior, who is ordered on such occasions to assign the brother a companion, 'ne auspicio sinistra vel scandalum oriatur.' There is a similar regulation in the statutes of Trinity College, Cambridge. So in The Tragicall History of Romeus and Juliet, 1552:—

'Apace our friar John to Mantua him hies,

And, for because in Italy it is a wonted guise

That friars in the town should seldom walk alone,

But of their convent aye should be accompanied with one

Of his profession, straight a house he findeth out,

In mind to take some friar with him to walk the town about.'

Shakespeare, having occasion for Friar John, has departed from the poem, and supposed the pestilence to rage at Verona instead of Mantua.

Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us forth ;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.

Law. Who bare my letter, then, to Romeo ?

John. I could not send it,—here it is again,—
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Law. Unhappy fortune ! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not nice,¹ but full of charge,
Of dear import ; and the neglecting it
May do much danger : Friar John, go hence ;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

John. Brother, I'll go and bring it thee. [Exit.]

Law. Now must I to the monument alone ;
Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake ;²
She will beshrew me much, that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents :
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come :
Poor living corse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb !

[Exit.]

SCENE III. A Church Yard : in it a Monument belonging to the Capulets. Enter PARIS, and his Page, bearing Flowers and a Torch.

Par. Give me my torch, boy : Hence, and stand aloof ;—

Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
Under yon yew-trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground ;
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread,
(Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves,)
But thou shalt hear it : whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard ; yet I will adventure.

[Retires.]

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers I strew thy bridal bed :

Sweet tomb, that in thy circuit dost contain
The perfect model of eternity ;
Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,³
Accept this latest favour at my hands ;
That living honour'd thee, and, being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb !

[The Boy whistles.]

The boy gives warning, something doth approach.
What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies, and true-love's rites ?
What, with a torch !—muffle me, night, a while.⁴

[Retires.]

Enter ROMEO and BALTHASAR, with a Torch, Mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron.

Hold, take this letter ; early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light : Upon thy life I charge thee,
Whate'er thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.

¹ i. e. was not wantonly written on a trivial or idle matter, but on a subject of importance.

² Instead of this line, and the concluding part of the speech, the first quarto reads only :—

'Lest that the lady should before I come
Be wak'd from sleepe, I will hie
To free her from that tomb of miserie.'

³ The folio has these lines :—

'Sweet flow'r, with flow'r's thy bridal bed I strew ;
O wo ! thy canopy is dust and stones,
Which with sweet water I will nightly dew ;
Or, wanting that, with tears disill'd by moans ;
The obsequies that I for thee will keep Nightly shall be, to strew thy grave and weep.'

In the text the seven lines are printed as they appear in the quarto of 1597.

⁴ Thus in Drayton's Polyolbion :—

'But suddenly the clouds which on the winds do fly
Do muffle him again.'

The word was not deemed unpoetical by Milton ; the Elder Brother in Comus uses it :—

'Unmuffle, ye faint stars,' &c.
muffle was a part of female dress

Why I descend into this bed of death,

Is, partly, to behold my lady's face :

But, chiefly, to take thence from her dead finger

A precious ring ; a ring that I must use

In dear⁵ employment : therefore hence, be gone :—

But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry

In what I further shall intend to do,

By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint,

And strew this hungry churchyard with thy limbs :

The time and my intents are savage-wild ;

More fierce, and more inexorable far,

Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shalt thou show me friendship.—Take thou that :

Live, and be prosperous ; and farewell, good fellow.

Bal. For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout ;
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt. [Retires.]

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,

[Breaking open the Door of the Monument.
And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food !

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin ;—with which grief,
It is supposed the fair creature died,—

And here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies : I will apprehend him :—

[Advances.]

Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague ;

Can vengeance be pursu'd further than death ?

Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee :

Obeys, and go with me ; for thou must die.

Rom. I must, indeed ; and therefore came I hither.—

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man ;
Fly hence and leave me ;—think upon these gone ;

Let them affright thee.—I beseech thee, youth,

Heap not another sin upon my head,

By urging me to fury :—O, be gone !

By heaven, I love thee better than myself :

For I come hither arm'd against myself :

Stay not, begone ;—live, and hereafter say—

A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,⁶

And do attack thee as a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me ? then have at thee,
boy. [They fight.]

Page. O, lord ! they fight : I will go call the watch.

[Exit Page.]

Par. O, I am slain ! [Falls.—If thou be merciful,

Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.]

Rom. In faith I will :—Let me peruse this face ;
Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris :

What said my man, when my betossed soul

Did not attend him as we rode ? I think,

He told me, Paris should have married Juliet :

Said he not so ? or did I dream it so ?

Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,

To think it was so ?—O, give me thy hand,

One writ with me in sour misfortune's book !

I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave—

A grave ? O, no ; a lantern,⁷ slaughter'd youth,

⁵ That is, in action of importance. The sense of the word dear has been explained. So Ben Jonson, in his Catiline, Act i. :—

'Put your known talents on so dear a business.'

⁶ I refuse to do as thou conjurest me to do, i. e. do part. So Constance, in King John, says :—

'No, I defy all counsel, all redress.'

⁷ A lantern may not, in this instance, signify an enclosure for a lighted candle, but a louvre, or what in ancient records is styled lanternium, i. e. a spacious round or octagonal turret, full of windows, by means of which cathedrals and sometimes halls are illuminated. See the beautiful lantern at Ely Minster.

A presence is a public room, which is at times the presence-chamber of a sovereign. This thought, extravagant as it is, is borrowed by Middleton in his Blurt
Master Constable :—

'The darkest dungeon which spite can devise
To throw this carcase in, her glorious eyes
Can make as lightsome as the fairest chamber
In Paris Louvre.'

For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man interr'd.

[Laying PARIS in the Monument.]

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death; O, how may I¹
Call this a lightning?—O, my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:²
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O, what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain,
To sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah, dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous;³
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour?
For fear of that, I will still stay with thee;
And never from this palace of dim night⁴
Depart again; here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids; O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest;⁵
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.—Eyes, look your last!

Arms, take your last embrace! and lips, O, you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death!—
Come, bitter conduct,⁶ come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy seasick weary bark!
Here's to my love! [Drinks.—O, true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies.]

Enter, at the other end of the Churchyard, FRIAR LAURENCE, with a Lantern, Crow, and Spade.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night Have my old feet stumbled at graves?—Who's there?

Who is it that consorts, so late, the dead?

Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.

Fri. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond' that vainly lends his light
To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capels' monument.

1 The first quarto reads, 'But how,' &c. This idea very frequently occurs in our old dramas. So in the Second Part of The Downfall of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1601:—

'I thought it was a lightning before death,
Too sudden to be certain.'

2 So in Sidney's Arcadia, b. iii. :—'Death being able to divide the soules, but not the beauty from her body.' And in Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond, 1594:—

'Decay'd roses of discoloured cheeks
Do yet retain some notes of former grace,
And ugly death sits fair within her face.'

3 Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. 1632, p. 463, speaking of the power of beauty, tells us:—

'But of all the tales in this kinde, that is most memorable of Death himselfe, when he should have stroken a sweet young virgin with his dart, he fell in love with the object.'

4 In The Second Maiden's Tragedy, recently printed from a MS. in the Lansdown collection, monuments are styled the 'palaces of death.'

5 See note 4, p. 160.

6 Conduct for conductor. So in a former scene:—
'And fire-eyed fury be my conduct now.'

7 This accident was reckoned ominous. So in King Henry VI. Part III.:—

'For many men that stumbe at the threshold
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.'
And in King Richard III. Hastings, going to execution, says:—

'Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumbe.'
This was one of the touches of nature that would have escaped the hand of any painter less attentive to it than Shakspeare. What happens to a person while he

Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master,
One that you love.

Fri. Who is it?

Bal. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he been there?

Bal. Full half an hour.

Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, sir:

My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.

Fri. Stay, then, I'll go alone:—Fear comes upon
me:

O, much I fear some ill unlucky thing.

Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,⁸
And that my master slew him.

Fri. Romeo? [Advances.]

Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre?—
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolour'd by this place of peace?

[Enters the Monument.]

Romeo! O, pale!—Who else? what, Paris too?
And steep'd in blood! Ah, what an unkind hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!—

The lady stirs.⁹ [JULIET wakes and stirs.]

Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord?

I do remember well where I should be,

And there I am:—Where is my Romeo?

[Noise within.]

Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that nest.

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep;
A greater Power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents; come, come away:
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too; come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:

Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;

Come, go, good Juliet!—[Noise again.] I dare stay no longer.

[Exit.]

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away, What's here? a cup, clos'd in my true love's hand?

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end:—

O, churl! drink all; and leave no friendly drop,

To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips;

Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,

To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses him.]

Thy lips are warm!¹⁰

is under the manifest influence of fear, will seem to him, when he is recovered from it, like a dream. Homer (book viii.) represents Rhesus dying, fast asleep, and, as it were, beholding his enemy in a dream, plunging a sword into his bosom. Eustathius and Dacier both applaud this image as very natural; for a man in such a condition, says Mr. Pope, awakes no further than to see confusedly what environs him, and to think it not a reality, but a vision.

9 In the alteration of this play, now exhibited on the stage, Garrick appears to have been indebted to Otway, who perhaps, without any knowledge of the story as told by Da Porto and Bandello, does not permit his hero to die before his wife awakes.

10 Shakspeare has been arraigned for making Romeo die before Juliet awakes from her trance, and thus losing a happy opportunity of introducing an affecting scene between these unfortunate lovers. He had undoubtedly never read the Italian novel, or any literal translation of it; and has in this particular followed the old poem, or an older drama on the subject. Be this as it may—Augustus Schlegel remarks, that 'the poet seems to have hit upon what was best. There is a measure of agitation, beyond which all that is super-added becomes torture, or glides off ineffectually from the already saturated mind. In case of the cruel reunion of the lovers for an instant, Romeo's remorse for his overhasty self-murder, Juliet's despair over her deceitful hope, at first cherished, then annihilated, that she was at the goal of her wishes, must have deviated into caricatures. Nobody surely doubts that Shakspeare was able to represent these with suitable force; but here every thing soothing was welcome, in order that we may not be frightened out of the melancholy, to which we willingly resign ourselves, by too painful discords. Why

ROMEO & JULIET.

Act V. Scene III.

I Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy :—Which way ?

Jul. Yea, noise !—then I'll be brief.—O, happy dagger ! [Snatching ROMEO's Dagger.] This is thy sheath [Stabs herself :] there rust, and let me die.

[Falls on ROMEO's Body, and dies.]

Enter Watch, with the Page of PARIS.

Page. This is the place ; there, where the torch doth burn.

I Watch. The ground is bloody ; Search about the churchyard :

Go, some of you, whoe'er you find, attach.

[Exeunt some.]

Pitiful sight ! here lies the county slain ;
And Juliet bleeding ; warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain these two days buried.—
Go, tell the prince,—run to the Capulets,— Raise up the Montagues,—some others search ;—

[Exeunt other Watchmen.]

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie ;
But the true ground of all these piteous woes,
We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter some of the Watch, with BALTHASAR.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the churchyard.

I Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come hither.

Enter another Watchman, with FRIAR LAURENCE.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps :

We took this mattock and this spade from him,
As he was coming from this churchyard side.

I Watch. A great suspicion ; Stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up,
That calls our person from our morning's rest ?

Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they 'so shriek abroad ?

La. Cap. The people in the street cry—Romeo, Some—Juliet, and some—Paris ; and all run,
With open outcry toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this, which startles in our ears ?

I Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris slain ;

And Romeo dead ; and Juliet, dead before,
Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

I Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's man ;

With instruments upon them, fit to open
These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O, Heavens !—O, wife ! look how our daughter bleeds !

This dagger hath mista'en,—for lo ! his house
Is empty on the back of Montague,—
And is misseathed in my daughter's bosom.²

should we heap still more upon accident, that is already so guilty ? Wherefore shall not the tortured Romeo quietly

“ Shake the yoke of inauspicious stars

From his world-wearied flesh ? ”

He holds his beloved in his arms, and, dying, cheers himself with a vision of everlasting marriage. She also seeks death, in a kiss, upon his lips. These last moments must belong unparticipated to tenderness, that we may hold fast to the thought, that love lives, although the lovers perish.

‘ Ay, noise ? then must I be resolute,

Oh, happy dagger ! thou shalt end my fear,

Rest in my bosom ; thus I come to thee.’

² The words, ‘ for lo ! his house is empty on the back of Montague,’ are to be considered parenthetical. It appears that the dagger was anciently worn behind the back. So in Humor's Ordinarie :—

‘ See you yon huge bum dagger at his back ?’

And in The Longer Thou Livest the More Fool Thou Art, 1570 :—

La. Cap. O, me ! this sight of death is as a bell,
That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter MONTAGUE and others.

Prince. Come, Montague ; for thou art early up,
To see thy son and heir more early down.

Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night ;³
Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath ;
What further wo conspires against mine age ?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O, thou untaught ! what manners is in this,
To press before thy father to a grave ?⁴

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while,
'Till we can clear these ambiguities,

And know their spring, their head, their true descent ;
And then will I be general of your woes,

And lead you even to death : Mean time forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience.—

Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least,
Yet most suspected, as the time and place
Doth make against me, of this direful murder ;
And here I stand, both to impeach and purge
Myself condemned and myself excus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief,⁵ for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.

Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet ;
And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife :

I married them ; and their stol'n marriage-day
Was Tybalt's doomsday, whose untimely death

Banish'd the new made bridegroom from this city ;
For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin'd.

You—to remove that siege of grief from her,—
Betroth'd, and would have married her perforce,

To county Paris :—Then comes she to me ;
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means

To rid her from this second marriage,
Or, in my cell there would she kill herself.

Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art,
A sleeping potion ; which so took effect

As I intended, for it wrought on her
The form of death : meantime I writ to Romeo,

That he should hither come at this dire night,
To help to take her from her borrow'd grave,

Being the time the potion's force should cease.
But he which bore my letter, Friar John,

Was staid by accident ; and yesternight
Return'd my letter back : Then all alone,

At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault ;

Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo :

But, when I came (some minute ere the time
Of her awakening,) here untimely lay

The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead.
She wakes ; and I entreated her come forth,

And bear this work of heaven with patience :
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb ;

And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
But (as it seems) did violence on herself.

All this I know ; and to the marriage
Her nurse is privy : And, if aught in this

‘ Thou must wear thy sword by thy side,
And thy dagger handsomly at thy backe.

³ After this line the quarto of 1597 adds :—

‘ And young Benvolio is deceased too.’

⁴ So in the Tragedy of Darius, 1603 :—

‘ Ah me ! malicious fates have done me wrong.’

Who came first to the world, should first depart.

It not becomes the old to over-live the young ;

This dealing is preposterous and over-thwart.’

⁵ ‘ It is to be lamented that the poet did not conclude the dialogue with the action, and avoid a narrative of events which the audience already knew.’—Johnson.

Shakspeare was led into this uninteresting narrative by following too closely The Tragical History of Romeo and Juliet. In this poem, (which is printed in the Variorum Editions of Shakspeare) the bodies of the dead are removed to a public scaffold ; and from that elevation is the Friar's narrative delivered. The same circumstance is introduced in Hamlet near the conclusion.

Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrific'd, some hour before his time,
Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.
Where's the Romeo's man? what can he say in this?

Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet's death;
And then in post he came from Mantua,
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father;
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.

Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.—
Where is the county's page, that rais'd the watch?
Sirrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave;

And bid me stand aloof, and so I did:
Anon, comes one with light to ope the tomb;
And, by and by, my master drew on him;
And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter doth make good the friar's words,

Their course of love, the tidings of her death:
And here he writes—that he did buy a poison
Of a poor 'pothecary, and therewithal
Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.—
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!—
See, what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love!
And, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen!—all are punish'd.

Cap. O, brother Montague, give me thy hand:
This is my daughter's jointure, for no more
Can I demand.

Mon. But I can give thee more:
For I will raise her statue in pure gold;
That, while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of true and faithful Juliet.

1 Mercutio and Paris. Mercutio is expressly called the Prince's kinsman in Act iii. Sc. 4; and that Paris was also the Prince's kinsman, may be inferred from the following passages. Capulet, speaking of the count in the fourth act, describes him as 'a gentleman of princely parentage;' and after he is killed, Romeo says:—

—Let me peruse this face;
Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris.'

2 The quarto of 1597 reads, 'A gloomy peace.' To gloom, is an ancient verb, used by Spenser and other old writers.

3 This line has reference to the poem from which the fable is taken; in which the Nurse is banished for concealing the marriage; Romeo's servant set at liberty, because he had only acted in obedience to his master's orders; the Apothecary is hanged; while Friar Laurence was permitted to retire to a hermitage near Verona, where he ended his life in penitence and tranquillity.

4 Shakspeare, in his revision of this play, has not effected the alteration by introducing any new incidents, but merely by adding to the length of the scenes. The piece appears to have been always a very popular one. Marston, in his Satires, 1598, says:—

'Luscu, what's play'd to-day? faith, now I know;
I set thy lips abroad, from whence doth flow
Nought but pure Juliet and Romeo.'

The concluding lines may have been formed on the last couplet of the old poem:—

—among the monuments that in Verona been,
There is no monument more worthy of the sight
Than is the tombe of Juliet and Romeus her knight.'

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity!

Prince. A glooming² peace this morning with it brings;

The sun for sorrow will not show his head:
Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;

Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished:³
For never was a story of more wo,
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo.⁴ [Exeunt.]

THIS play is one of the most pleasing of our author's performances. The scenes are busy and various, the incidents numerous and important, the catastrophe irresistibly affecting, and the process of the action carried on with such probability, at least with such congruity to popular opinions, as tragedy requires.

Here is one of the few attempts of Shakspeare to exhibit the conversation of gentlemen, to represent the airy sprightliness of juvenile elegance. Dryden mentions a tradition, which might easily reach his time, of a declaration made by Shakspeare, that he was obliged to kill Mercutio in the third Act, lest he should have been killed by him. Yet he thinks him no such formidable person, but that he might have lived through the play and died in his bed, without danger to the poet. Dryden well knew, had he been in quest of truth, in a pointed sentence, that more regard is commonly had to the words than the thought, and that it is very seldom to be rigorously understood. Mercutio's wit, gayety, and courage, will always procure him friends that wish him a longer life; but his death is not precipitated, he has lived out the time allotted him in the construction of the play; nor do I doubt the ability of Shakspeare to have continued his existence, though some of his sallies are perhaps out of the reach of Dryden; whose genius was not very fertile of merriment, nor ductile to humour, but acute, argumentative, comprehensive, and sublime.

The Nurse is one of the characters in which the author delighted: he has with great subtlety of distinction, drawn her at once loquacious and secret, obsequious and insolent, trusty and dishonest.

JOHNSON.

* A. W. Schlegel has answered this remark at length, and, as I think, satisfactorily, in a detailed criticism upon this tragedy, published in the Horen, a journal conducted by Schiller in 1794—1795, and made accessible to the English reader in Ollier's Literary Miscellany, Part I. In his Lectures on Dramatic Literature (vol. ii. p. 135, Eng. translation,) will be found some further sensible remarks upon the 'conceits' here stigmatized. It should be remembered that playing on words was a very favourite species of wit combat with our ancestors. 'With children, as well as nations of the most simple manners, a great inclination to playing on words is often displayed; [they cannot therefore be both puerile and unnatural: If the first charge is founded, the second cannot be so.] In Homer we find several examples; the Books of Moses, the oldest written memorial of the primitive world, are, it is well known, full of them. On the other hand, poets of a very cultivated taste, or orators like Cicero, have delighted in them. Whoever, in Richard the Second, is disgusted with the affecting play of words of the dying John of Gaunt, on his own name, let him remember that the same thing occurs in the Ajax of Sophocles.' S. W. S.

† This quotation is also found in the Preface to Dryden's Fables:—'Just John Littlewit, in Bartholomew Fair, who had a conceit (as he tells you) left him in his misery; a miserable conceit.'—Spectator

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE original story on which this play is built may be found in Saxo Grammaticus, the Danish historian. From thence Belleforest adopted it in his collection of novels, in seven volumes, which he began in 1564, and continued to publish through succeeding years. It was from Belleforest that the old black letter prose 'Hystorie of Hamblet' was translated; the earliest edition of which, known to the commentators, was dated in 1608; but it is supposed that there were earlier impressions.

The following passage is found in an Epistle, by Thomas Nashe, prefixed to Greene's Arcadia, which was published in 1599:—'I will turn back to my first text of studies of delight, and talk a little in friendship with a few of our rival translators. It is a common practice now-a-days, among a sort of shifting companions, that runne through every art and thrive by none, to leave the trade of Novertint, [i. e. the law] whereunto they were born, and busie themselves with the endeavours of art, that could scarcely latinize their neck-verse, if they should have neede; yet English Seneca, read by candle-light, yeelds many good sentences, as Bloud is a beggar, and so forth: and if you entreat him faire in a frosty morning, he will afford you whole Hamlets, I should say, Handfuls of tragical speeches. But O, grief! Tempus edax verum—what is it that will last always? The sea exhaled by drops, will in continuance be drie; and Seneca, let bloud line by line, and page by page, at length must needs die to our stage.'

It is manifest from this passage that some play on the story of Hamlet had been exhibited before the year 1599. Malone thinks that it was not Shakspeare's drama, but an elder performance, on which, with the aid of the old prose History of Hamblet, his tragedy was formed.

In a tract, entitled 'Wits Miserie, or the World's Madnesse, discovering the incarnate Devils of the Age,' published by Thomas Lodge in 1596, one of the devils is said to be 'a foule lubber, and looks as pale as the vizard of the ghost, who cried so miserably at the theatre, Hamlet, revenge.' But it is supposed that this also may refer to an elder performance.

Dr. Percy possessed a copy of Speght's edition of Chaucer, which had been Gabriel Harvey's, who had written his name and the date, 1598, both at the beginning and end of the volume, and many remarks in the intermediate leaves; among which are these words:—'The younger sort take much delight in Shakspeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, have it in them to please the wiser sort.' Malone doubts whether this was written in 1598, because translated Tasso is named in another note; but it is not necessary that the allusion should be to Fairfax's translation, which was not printed till 1600: it may refer to the version of the first five books of the Jerusalem, published by R. C. [arew] in 1594.

We may therefore safely place the date of the first composition of Hamlet, at least as early as 1597; and, for reasons adduced by Mr. George Chalmers, we may presume that it was revised, and the additions made to it in the year 1600.

The first entry on the Stationers' books is by James Roberts, July 26, 1602; and a copy of the play in its first state, printed for N. L. and John Trundell, in 1603, has recently been discovered. As in the case of the earliest impressions of Romeo and Juliet, and the Merry Wives of Windsor, this edition of Hamlet appears to have been either printed from an imperfect manuscript of the prompt books, or the playhouse copy, or stolen from the author's papers. It is next to impossible that it can have been taken down during the representation, as some have supposed was the case with the other two plays.

The variations of this early copy from the play of Hamlet, in its improved state, are too numerous and striking to admit a doubt of the play having been subsequently revised, amplified, and altered by the poet. There are even some variations in the plot; the principal of which are, that Horatio announces to the Queen Hamlet's unexpected return from his voyage to England; and that the Queen is expressly declared to be innocent of any participation in the murder of Hamlet's father, and privy to his intention of revenging his death. There are also some few lines and passages, which do not appear in the revised copy. The principal variations are noticed in the course of the notes.*

It again issued from the press in 1604, in its corrected and amended state, and in the title-page is stated to be 'newly imprinted, and enlarged to almost as much again as it was, according to the true and perfect copy.' From these words Malone had drawn the natural conclusion that a former less perfect copy had issued from the press; but his star was not propitious; he never saw it. Though it is said to have formed part of the collection of sir Thomas Hanmer, it only came to light at the commencement of the present year, [1925:] too late, alas! even to gratify the enthusiasm of his zealous friend, that worthy man, James Boswell; upon whom devolved the office of giving to the world the accumulated labours of Malone's latter years, devoted to the illustration of Shakspeare.

The character of Hamlet has been frequently discussed, and with a variety of contradictory opinions. Johnson and Steevens have made severe animadversions upon some parts of his conduct. A celebrated writer of Germany, has very skillfully pointed out the cause of the defects in Hamlet's character, which unfit him for the dreadful office to which he is called. 'It is clear to me (says Goëthe) that Shakspeare's intention was to exhibit the effects of a great action, imposed as a duty upon a mind too feeble for its accomplishment. In this sense I find the character consistent throughout. Here is an oak planted in a china vase, proper to receive only the most delicate flowers. The roots strike out, and the vessel flies to pieces. A pure, noble, highly moral disposition, but without that energy of soul which constitutes the hero, sinks under a load which it can neither support nor resolve to abandon altogether. All his obligations are sacred to him; but this alone is above his powers! An impossibility is required at his hands; not an impossibility in itself, but that which is so to him. Observe how he shifts, turns, hesitates, advances and recedes! how he is continually reminded and reminding himself of his great commission, which he, nevertheless, in the end seems almost entirely to lose sight of, and this without ever recovering his former tranquillity.†

Dr. Akenside suggested that the madness of Hamlet is not altogether feigned; and the notion has of late been revived. Dr. Ferriar, in his Essay towards a Theory of Apparitions, has termed the state of mind which Shakspeare exhibits to us in Hamlet,—as the consequence of conflicting passions and events operating on a frame of acute sensibility,—latent lunacy.

It has often occurred to me (says Dr. F.) that Shakspeare's character of Hamlet can only be understood on this principle:—He feigns madness for political purposes, while the poet means to represent his understanding as really (and unconsciously to himself) unhinged by the cruel circumstances in which he is placed. The horror of the communication made by his father's spectre, the necessity of belying his attachment to an innocent and deserving object, the certainty of his mother's guilt, and the supernatural impulse by which he is goaded to an act of assassination abhorrent to his nature, are causes sufficient to overwhelm and distract a mind previously disposed to "weakness and to melancholy," and originally full of tenderness and natural affection. By referring to the play, it will be seen that his real insanity is only developed after the mock play. Then, in place of a systematic conduct, conducive to his purposes, he becomes irresolute, inconsequent; and the plot appears to stand unaccountably still. Instead of striking at his object, he resigns himself to the current of events, and sinks at length ignobly under the stream.‡

* There are some singular variations in the names of the Dramatis Personæ. Corambis and Montano are the names given to the Polonius and Reynaldo of the revised play; for Rosencrantz and Guildestiern we have Rosencraft and Gilderstone; and Osrick is merely designated a Braggart Gentleman.

Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd¹ up a list of landless resolute,
For food and diet, to some enterprise
That hath a stomach² in't: which is no other,
(As it doth well appear unto our state,)
But to recover of us, by strong hand,
And terms compulsory, those foresaid lands
So by his father lost: And this, I take it,
Is the main motive of our preparations;
The source of this our watch; and the chief head
Of this post-haste and romage³ in the land.

Well may it sort,⁵ that this portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch; so like the king
That was, and is, the question⁶ of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is, to trouble the mind's eye.
In the most high and palmy⁷ state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me:
If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
Which, happily, foreknowing, may avoid,
O, speak!

Or, if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death, [Cock crows.

Speak of it:—stay, and speak.—Stop it, Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partisan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.

Ber. 'Tis here!

Johnson explains it, 'full of spirit, not regulated or guided by knowledge or experience,' and has been hitherto uncontradicted.

1 i. e. snapped up or taken up hastily. 'Scroccare is properly to do any thing at another man's cost, to shark or shift for any thing. Scroccolone, a cunning shifter or sharker for any thing in time of need, namely for victuals; a tall treacher-man, shifting up and down for belly cheer.' The same word also signifies to snap. This word has not yet lost its force in vulgar conversation.

2 Stomach is used for determined purpose.

3 Romage, now apelt rummage, and in common use as a verb, though not as a substantive, for making a thorough ransack or search, a busy and tumultuous movement.

4 All the lines within crotchets in this play are omitted in the folio of 1623. The title-pages of the quartos of 1604 and 1605 declare this play to be 'enlarged to almost as much againe as it was, according to the true and perfect copie.'

We do it wrong, being so majestic,
To offer it the show of violence;
For it is, as the air, invulnerable,¹²
And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew,

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing
Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
The cock, that is the trumpet of the morn,¹³
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day; and at his warning,
Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
The extravagant and erring¹⁴ spirit hies
To his confine: and of the truth herein
This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.¹⁵
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
This bird of dawning singeth all night long:
And then they say no spirit dares stir abroad;
The nights are wholesome: then no planets strike,
No fairy takes,¹⁶ nor witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious¹⁷ is the time.

Hor. So I have heard, and do in part believe it.
But look, the morn,¹⁸ in russet mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill:
Break we our watch up; and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have seen to-night
Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life,
This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him:
Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morning know
Where we shall find him most convenient. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in the same. Enter the King, Queen, HAMLET, POLONIUS, LAERTES, VOLTIMAND, CORNELIUS, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green; and that it us befitted
To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom
To be contracted in one brow of woe;
Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature,
That we with wisest sorrow think on him,
Together with remembrance of ourselves.
Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, have been occasioned by witchcraft, is the following:—'On Friday there appeared a tall man, who twice crossed him swiftly; and when the earl came to the place where he saw this man he fell sick.'—Lodge's Illustrations of English History, vol. iii. p. 49.

Johnson remarks that the speech of Horatio to the spectre is very elegant and noble, and congruous to the common traditions of the causes of apparitions.

12 Thus in Macbeth—

'As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress.'

And in King John—

'Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven.'

13 'And now the cocke, the morning's trumpeter,

Play'd hunts-up for the day-star to appear.'

Drayton.

14 'The extravagant and erring spirit.' 'Extra-vagans, wandering about, going beyond bounds.' Thus in Othello:—'To an extravagant and wheeling stranger.'

—Erring is erraticus, straying or roving up and down.

15 This is a very ancient superstition. Philostratus, giving an account of the apparition of Achilles' shade to Apollonius of Tyanna, says, 'that it vanished with a little gleam as soon as the cock crowed.' There is a Hymn of Prudentius, and another of St. Ambrose, in which it is mentioned; and there are some lines in the latter very much resembling Horatio's speech. Mr. Douce has given them in his Illustrations of Shakspeare.

16 i. e. no fairy blasts, or strikes. Thus in the Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. Sc. 4—

'And there he blasts the tree and takes the cattle.'

See note on that passage.

17 It has already been observed that gracious is sometimes used by Shakspeare for graced, favoured. Vide note on As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 2.

18 First quarto, 'sun'

The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,—
With one auspicious, and one dropping eye;¹
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,²
Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr'd
Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
With this affair along:—For all our thanks.

Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras,—
Holding a weak supposal of our worth;
Or thinking by our late dear brother's death,
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame,
Colleague³ with this dream of his advantage,
He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father, with all bands⁴ of law,
To our most valiant brother.—So much for him.
Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting.
Thus much the business is: We have here writ
To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,—
Who, impotent and bed-rid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress
His further gait⁵ herein; in that the levies,
The lists, and full proportions, are all made
Out of his subject:—and we here despatch
You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand,
For bearers of this greeting to old Norway;
Giving to you no further personal power
To business with the king, more than the scope
Of these related articles allow.⁶

Farewell; and let your haste commend your duty.
Cor. Vol. In that, and all things, will we show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell.

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
You told us of some suit; What is't, Laertes?
You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
And lose your voice: What would'st thou beg,
Laertes,

That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?
The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.⁷
What would'st thou have, Laertes?

Laer. My dread lord,
Your leave and favour to return to France;

1 Thus the folio. The quarto reads:

'With an auspicious and a dropping eye.'

The same thought occurs in The Winter's Tale:—
'She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled.' There is an old proverbial phrase, 'To laugh with one eye, and cry with the other.'

2 i. e. grief.

3 i. e. united to this strange fancy of, &c.

4 The folio reads, bonds; but bands and bonds signified the same thing in the poet's time.

5 Gait here signifies course, progress. Gait for road, way, path, is still in use in the north. We have this word again in A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act
v. Sc. 2:—

'Every fairy takes his gait.'

6 The folio reads, 'More than the scope of these dilated articles allow.' I have not scrupled to read re- lated, upon the authority of the first quarto, as more intelligible. Malone says, 'the poet should have written allows;' but the grammar and practice of Shakespeare's age was not strict in the concordance of plural and singular in noun and verb: and numerous examples might be adduced from his contemporaries to prove this. The question is, Are the writers of that time to be tried by modern rules of grammar, with which they were not acquainted? Stevens, with a sweeping assertion, which no one conversant with MSS. of the time will allow, would attribute all such inaccuracies to illiterate transcribers or printers. We have Malone's assertion, that such errors are to be met with in almost every page of the first folio. The first quarto reads:—

'—no further personal power

To business with the king

Than those related articles do shew.'

7 The various parts of the body enumerated are not more allied, more necessary to each other, than the throne of Denmark (i. e. the king) is bound to your father to do him service.

From whence though willingly I came to Denmark,
To show my duty in your coronation;
Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,
My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France,
And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says
Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, [wrung from me my slow leave,

By laboursome petition; and, at last,
Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent:]
I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine,
And thy best graces spend it at thy will.⁸

But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind.⁹

[Aside.]

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much i' the sun.¹⁰

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.

Do not, for ever, with thy veiled lids¹¹

Seek for thy noble father in the dust:

Thou know'st, 'tis common; all, that live, must die,

Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen.

If it be,

Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seems, madam! nay, it is; I know not seems.

'Tis not alone my inkly cloak, good mother,

Nor customary suits of solemn black,

Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,

No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,

Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,

Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,

That can denote me truly: These, indeed, seem,

For they are actions that a man might play;

But I have that within, which passeth show;

These but the trappings and the suits of woe.¹²

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:

But you must know your father lost a father;

That father lost, lost his;¹³ and the survivor bound

In filial obligation, for some term.

8 In the first quarto this passage stands thus:—

'King. With all our heart, Laertes, fare thee well.

Laer. I in all love and dutie take my leave. [Exit.']

The king's speech may be thus explained:—'Take an auspicious hour, Laertes; be your time your own, and thy best virtues guide thee in spending of it at thy will.'
Johnson thought that we should read, 'And my best graces.' The editors had rendered this passage doubly obscure by erroneously placing a colon at graces.

9 'A little more than kin, and less than kind.' This passage has baffled the commentators, who are at issue about its meaning; but have none of them rightly explained it. A contemporary of the poet will lead us to its true meaning. A little more than kin has been rightly said to allude to the double relationship of the king to Hamlet, as uncle and step-father, his kindred by blood and kindred by marriage. By less than kind Hamlet means degenerate and base. 'Going out of kinde, (says Baret,) which goeth out of kinde, which doth or worketh dishonour to his kindred. Degener; fortignant.—Alcearic, K. 59. 'Fortigner, (says Cot-grave,) to degenerate, to grow out of kind, to differ in conditions with his ancestors.' That less than kind and out of kind have the same meaning, who can doubt?

10 It is probable that a quibble is intended between sun and son. The old spelling is sonne.

11 i. e. with eyes cast down.

'—Vail your regard

Upon a wrong'd, I'd fain have said a maid.'

Measure for Measure, vol. i.

12 'My grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortured soul.'

King Richard II.

13 i. e. your father lost a father, (your grandfather,) which lost grandfather also lost his father. The first quarto reads, 'That father dead, lost his.'

To do obsequious sorrow.¹ But to persevere
In obstinate condolement;² is a course
Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief:
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven;³
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;
An understanding simple and unschool'd:
For what, we know, must be, and is as common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we, in our peevish opposition,
Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
To reason most absurd; whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first corse, till he that died to-day,
This must be so. We pray you, throw to earth
This unprevailing⁴ woe; and think of us
As of a father: for let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our throne;
And with no less nobility of love,⁵
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart⁶ toward you. For your intent
In going back to school in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:
And we beseech you, bend⁷ you to remain
Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers,
Hamlet;

I pray thee, stay with us, go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply;
Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come;
This gentle and unford⁸ accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof
No jocund health, that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king's rouse⁹ the heaven shall bruit again,
Respeaking earthly thunder. Come away.

[Exeunt King, Queen, Lords, &c. POLO-
NIUS, and LAERTES.]

Ham. O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve¹⁰ itself into a dew!

1 Obsequious sorrow is dutiful, observant sorrow. Shakespeare seems to have used this word generally with an allusion to obsequies, or funeral rites.

2 Condolement for grief.

3 'It shows a will most undisciplined towards heaven.'

4 Unprevailing was used in the sense of unavailing as late as Dryden's time. 'He may often prevail himself of the same advantages in English.'—Essay on Dramatic Poetry, 1st ed.

'And dyvers noble victoryes, as the history doth express,

That he atcheyv'd to the honour of the town,
Could not him prevail whan Fortune lyst to frown.'

Metrical Visions by G. Cavendish, p. 81.

5 This was a common form of figurative expression. The Ghost, describing his affection for the Queen, says:—

'To me, whose love was of that dignity.'

6 I. e. dispense, bestow. Thus Dryden:—

'High state and honours to others impart,

But give me your heart.'

7 To bend is to incline. 'The moeste parte bende to, &c.: In hoc consilium inaxime inclinant,' &c.—Bartol.

8 The quarto of 1603 reads:—

'The rouse the king shall drink unto the prince.'

A rouse appears to have been a deep draught to the health of any one, in which it was customary to empty the glass or vessel. Its etymology is uncertain; but I suspect it to be only an abridgement of carouse, which is used in the same sense. See Peacham's Complete Gentleman, 1627, p. 194.

Carouse, seems to have come to us from the French, who again appear to have derived it from the German gar-auss, to drink all out: at least so we may judge from the following passage in Rabelais, B. lii. Prologue:—'Enfans, beuvez a plein godets. Si bon ne vous semble, laissez le. Je ne suis de ces Importuns litte-lores, qui par force, par outrage, et violence contraignent les gentils compagnons trinquer, boire caraus, et altaux.'

The reader may consult Mr. Gifford's Massinger, vol. i. p. 240.

9 To resolve had anciently the same meaning as to dissolve. 'To thaw or resolves that which is frozen;

Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
His canon¹¹ 'gainst self-slaughter! O, God! O, God!

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fie on't! O, fie! 'tis an unweeded garden
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,

Possess it merely.¹² That it should come to this!
But two months dead!—nay, not so much, not two:
So excellent a king; that was, to this,
Hyperion¹³ to a satyr: so loving to my mother,
That he might not beteem¹⁴ the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on: And yet, within a month,— Let me not think on't;—Frailty, thy name is woman!

A little month; or ere those shoes were old,
With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
Like Niobe, all tears;—why she, even she,—
O, heaven! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,¹⁵
Would have mourn'd longer,—married with my uncle,

My father's brother; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules: Within a month;
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married:—O, most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to, good;
But break, my heart: for I must hold my tongue!

Enter HORATIO, BERNARDO, and MARCELLUS.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you well;
Horatio,—or I do forget myself.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you.

regelo.—The snow is resolved and melted. To till the ground, and resolve it into dust.—Cooper. This is another word in a Latin sense; but it is not peculiar to Shakespeare.

10 The old copy reads, canon; but this was the old spelling of canon, a law or decree.

11 I. e. absolutely, solely, wholly. Mere, Lat.

12 Hyperion, or Apollo, always represented as a model of beauty.

13 I. e. deign to allow. This word being of uncommon occurrence, it was changed to permitted by Rowe; and to let even by Theobald. Steevens had the merit of pointing out the passage in Golding's Ovid, which settles its meaning:—

'—Yet could he not beteems

'The shape of any other bird than eagle for to seeme'

'—nulla tamen alite verti

Dignatur, nil quæ possit sua fulmine ferre.'

Rowe has an elegant imitation of this passage:—

'I thought the gentlest breeze that wakes the spring

Too rough to breathe upon her.'

The word occurs again in A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. Sc. 2.

14 'Oh heaven! a beast that wants discourse of reason.' Mr. Gifford, in a note on Massinger, vol. i. p. 149, is of opinion that we should read, 'discourse and reason.' It has, however, been shown by several quotations that 'discourse of reason' was the phraseology of Shakespeare's time; and, indeed, the poet again uses the same language in Troilus and Cressida, Act ii. Sc. 2:

'—is your blood

So madly hot, that no discourse of reason—

—can qualify the same.'

In the language of the schools, 'Discourse' is that rational act of the mind by which we deduce or infer one thing from another. Discourse of reason therefore may mean ratiocination. Brutes have not this reasoning faculty, though they have what has been called instinct and memory. Hamlet opposes the discursive power of the intellect of men to the instinct of brutes in Act iv. Sc. 4, which may tend to elucidate his present meaning; if the reader has any doubts. The first quarto reads, 'a beast devoid of reason.' We have discourse of thought, for the discursive range of thought, in Othello, Act iv. Sc. 2.

And what make you¹ from Wittenberg, Horatio?— Marcellus?

Mar. My good lord,—

Ham. I am very glad to see you; good even, sir.
But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so:

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,

To make it trustor of your own report

Against yourself: I know you are no truant.

But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow student;

I think, it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bak'd meats²

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

'Would, I had met my dearest³ foe in heaven,

Or⁴ ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

My father,—Methinks, I see my father.

Hor. Where,

My lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye,⁵ Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw! who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father?

Hor. Season your admiration for a while

With an attent ear; till I may deliver,

Upon the witness of these gentlemen,

This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,

Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,

In the dead waste and middle of the night,⁶

Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,

Armed to point, exactly, cap-à-pé,

Appears before them, and, with solemn march,

Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd,

By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes,

Within his truncheon's length; whilst they, distill'd⁷

Almost to jelly with the act of fear,

Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me

In dreadful secrecy impart they did;

And I with them, the third night kept the watch;

Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,

Form of the thing, each word made true and good,

The apparition comes; I knew your father;

These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

1 i.e. what do you. Vide note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3.

2 It was anciently the custom to give an entertainment at a funeral. The usage was derived from the Roman cena funeralis; and is not yet disused in the North, where it is called an arvel supper.

3 See note on Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1.

4 This is the reading of the quarto of 1604. The first quarto and the folio read, 'Ere I had ever.'

5 — himself behind

Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind.⁸

Rape of Lucrece.

Chaucer has the expression in his Man of Lawe's
Tale:—

'But it were with thilke eyen of his mind,

Which men mowen see when they ben blinde.'

And Ben Jonson, in his Masque of Love's Triumphs:—

'As only by the mind's eye may be seen.'

And Richard Rolle, in his Speculum Vitae, MS. speaking of Jacob's Dream:—

'That Jacob sawe with gostly eye.'

i.e. the eye of the mind or spirit.

6 The first quarto, 1603, has:—

'In the dead vast and middle of the night.'

suffer the following note to stand as I had written it previous to the discovery of that copy.

We have 'that vast of night' in The Tempest, Act I.

Sc. 2. Shakespeare has been unjustly accused of in-

Hor. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did:

But answer made it none; yet once, methought,

It lifted up its head, and did address

Itself to motion, like as it would speak;

But, even then, the morning cock crew loud;⁸

And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,

And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;

And we did think it writ down in our duty,

To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me.

Hold you the watch to-night?

All. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

All. Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not

His face.

Hor. O, yes, my lord; he wore his beaver⁹ up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more

In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would, I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like,

Very like: Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. Ber. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzled? no?

Hor. It was as I have seen it in his life,

A sable silver'd.¹⁰

Ham. I will watch to-night;

Perchance, 'twill walk again.

Hor. I warrant you, it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,

And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,

If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,

Let it be tenable¹¹ in your silence still;

And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,

Give it an understanding, but no tongue;

I will requite your loves: So, fare you well;

Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,

I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: Farewell.

[Exeunt HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BERNARDO.]

tending a quibble here between waist and waste. There appears to be nothing incongruous in the expression; on the contrary, by 'the dead waste and middle of the night,' I think, we have a forcible image of the void stillness of midnight.

7 The folio reads, bestill'd.

8 'It is a most inimitable circumstance in Shakespeare so to have managed this popular idea, as to make the Ghost, which has been so long obstinately silent, and of course must be dismissed by the morning, begin or rather prepare to speak, and to be interrupted at the very critical time by the crowing of a cock. Another poet, according to custom, would have suffered his ghost tamely to vanish, without contriving this start, which is like a start of guilt: to say nothing of the aggravation of the future suspense occasioned by this preparation to speak, and to impart some mysterious secret. Less would have been expected if nothing had been promised.'—T. Warton.

9 That part of the helmet which may be lifted up,
Mr. Douce has given representations of the beaver, and other parts of a helmet, and fully explained them in his Illustrations, vol. i. p. 443.

10 'And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white.'

Shakespeare's Twelfth Sonnet.

11 The quarto of 1603 reads tenible. The other quartos, tenable. The folio of 1623 treble.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
I doubt some foul play: 'would, the night were come!
'Till then sit still, my soul: Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

[Exit.

SCENE III. A Room in Polonius' House. Enter
LAERTES and OPHELIA.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd; farewell:
And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood;
A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute;
No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more:

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone
In thews,² and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now;
And now no soil, nor cautel³ doth besmirch⁴
The virtue of his will: but, you must fear,
His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
For he himself is subject to his birth:
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and health of the whole state;⁵
And therefore must his choice be circumscribed
Unto the voice and yielding of that body,
Whereof he is the head: Then if he says he loves
you,

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further,
Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.
Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list⁶ his songs;
Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd⁷ importunity.
Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest⁸ maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes:

1 This is the reading of the quarto copy. The folio has—

‘—sweet, not lasting,
The suppliance of a minute.’

It is plain that perfume is necessary to exemplify the idea of sweet not lasting. ‘The suppliance of a minute’ should seem to mean supplying or enduring only that short space of time, as transitory and evanescent. The simile is eminently beautiful: it is to be regretted that it should be obscured by an unusual word.

2 I. e. sinews and muscular strength. Vide note on the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act III. Sc. 2.

3 Cautel is cautious circumspection, subtlety, or deceit. Minshew explains it, ‘a crafty way to deceive.’ Thus, in a Lover's Complaint:—

‘In him a plentitude of subtle matter,
Appled to cauteles, all strange forms receives.’

And in Coriolanus:—

‘—be caught by cautelous baits and practice.’

4 ‘The virtue of his will,’ means his virtuous intentions.

5 Besmirch is besmeared, or sully.

6 ‘The safety and health of the whole state.’ Thus the quarto of 1604. In the folio it is altered to ‘The sanctity,’ &c., supposing the metre defective. But safety is used as a triassyllable by Spenser and others. Thus Hall, in his first Saure, b. iii.:

‘Nor fish can dive so deep in yielding sea,
Though Thetis self should swear her safety.’

7 ‘If with too credulous ear you listen to his songs.’

8 Licentious.

9 I. e. the most cautious, the most discreet. In Green's Never too Late, 1616:—‘Love requires not chastity, but that her soldiers be chary.’ And again:—‘She lives chaste enough that lives charily.’ We have charyness in The Merry Wives of Windsor; and unshury in Twelfth Night, Act III. Sc. 4.

The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd;
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary, then: best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson keep,
As watchman to my heart; But, good my brother,
Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless⁹ libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own read.¹⁰

Laer. O, fear me not.
I stay too long;—But here my father comes.

Enter POLONIUS.

A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! aboard, aboard, for shame;
The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And you are staid for: There,—my blessing with you;

[Laying his Hand on LAERTES' Head.
And these few precepts in thy memory
Look thou character.¹¹ Give thy thoughts no tongue
Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;¹²
But do not dull thy palm¹³ with entertainment
Of each new hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrel: but, being in,
Bear it that the opposer may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure,¹⁴ but reserve thy judgment.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy:
For the apparel oft proclaims the man:
And they in France, of the best rank and station,
Are most select and generous, chief¹⁵ in that.
Neither a borrower, nor a lender be:
For loan oft loses both itself and friend;
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.¹⁶
This above all,—To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,

9 Reckless, or negligent; Omissus animus.—Baret.
10 I. e. regards not his own lesson. In The Two Angry Women of Abington, 1599, we have:—‘Take heed, is a good read.’ And in Sternhold, Psalm i.:

‘Blest is the man that hath not lent
To wicked rede his ear.’

11 I. e. mark, imprint, strongly infix. In Shakspeare's 122d Sonnet:—

‘—thy tables are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory.’

12 The old copies read, ‘with hoops of steel.’

13 ‘But do not dull thy palm.’ This figurative expression means, ‘do not blunt thy feeling by taking every new acquaintance by the hand, or by admitting him to the intimacy of a friend.’

14 I. e. judgment, opinion; censura, Lat. Thus in King Henry VI. Part II.:

‘The king is old enough to give his censure.’

15 The quarto of 1603, reads:—

‘Are of a most select and generall chief in this.’

The folio:—

‘Are of a most select and generous cheff,’ in that. The other quartos give the line:—

‘As of a most select and generous, cheefe in that.’
‘Or of a most select and generous, cheefe in that.’

Malone has tried to torture the passage into a meaning, by supposing an allusion to the chief or upper part of a shield in heraldry. But the redundancy of the line, and discrepancy of the copies, evidently show it to be corrupt. The simple emendation by omitting of a, and the proper punctuation of the line, make all clear. ‘The nobility of France are most select and high-minded (generous) chiefly in that; chief being an adjective used adverbially. We have generous for high minded, noble, in Othello, and in Measure for Measure.

16 I. e. thrift, economical prudence

Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell; my blessing season¹ this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.²

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia; and remember well What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd,

And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell. [Exit LAERTES.]

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the lord Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well bethought:

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late

Given private time to you; and you yourself

Have of your audience been most free and bounteous:

If it be so, (as so 'tis put on me,) I must tell you,

You do not understand yourself so clearly,

As it behoves my daughter, and your honour:

What is between you? give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late, made many tenders Of his affection to me.

Pol. Affection? puh! you speak like a green girl,

Unsuited³ in such perilous circumstance.

Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby;

That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay,

Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly;

Or, (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Wrangling it thus,) you'll tender me a fool.⁴

Oph. My lord, he hath importun'd me with love, In honourable fashion.⁵

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord,

With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

Pol. Ay, springes to catch woodcocks.⁶ I do know,

When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul

Lends the tongue vows:⁷ these blazes, daughter,

Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both,

Even in their promise, as it is a making,—

You must not take for fire. From this time, Be somewhat scancer of your maiden presence;

Set your entreatments⁸ at a higher rate,

Than a command to parley. For lord Hamlet,

Believe so much in him, that he is young;

And with a larger tether⁹ may he walk,

Than may be given you: In few, Ophelia,

Do not believe his vows: for they are brokers,¹⁰

Not of that die which their investments show,

But more implorators of unholy suits,

Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,

The better to beguile. This is for all,—

I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,

Have you so slander any moment's leisure,

As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.

Look to't, I charge you; come your ways.

Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. The Platform. Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager¹¹ air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; it then draws near the season,

Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, and Ordnance shot off within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse.

Keeps wassel,¹² and the swaggering up-spring¹³ reels;

And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,

The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out

The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't:

But to my mind,—though I am native here,

And to the manner born,—it is a custom

More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.

This heavy-headed revel, east and west,¹⁴

Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations:

They clepe¹⁵ us, drunkards, and with swinish phrase

11 Eager was used in the sense of the French aigre, sharp.

12 The origin of the word wassel is thus related by Geoffrey of Monmouth:—“On Vortigern's first interview with Rowena, she kneeled before him, and presenting a cup of wine, said to him, Lord king, was hel, i. e. be health, or health be to you! Vortigern, unacquainted with the Saxon language, inquired the meaning of these words, and being told that he should answer them by saying Drinc heil, he did so, and commanded Rowena to drink; then taking the cup from her hand, he kissed the damsel and pledged her. From that time the custom remained in Britain that whoever drank to another at a feast said Was hel, and he that immediately after received the cup answered Drinc heil.” The story is also told in the Metrical Chronicle of Robert of Brunne. “To keep wassel, was to devote the time to festivity. Vide Love's Labour's Lost, Act v. Sc. 2. To wake, signified to revel at night. Vide Florio in voce Veggia.”

13 I take upspring here to mean nothing more than up start. Steevens, from a passage in Chapman's Alphonsus, thought that it might mean a dance.

14 This and the following twenty-one lines are omitted in the folio. They had probably been omitted in representation, lest they should give offence to Anne of Denmark.

15 Clepe, call, clypian, Sax. The Danes were indeed proverbial as drunkards, and well they might be, according to the accounts of the time. “A lively French traveller, being asked what he had seen in Denmark, replied, “Rien de singulier sinon qu'on y chante tous les jours le Roi doit,” alluding to the French mode of celebrating Twelfth Day.” See De Brieux Origines de quelques Coutumes, p. 56. “Heywood, in his Philocthonista, or The Drunkard Opened, &c. 1635, 4to. speaking of what he calls the vinosity of nations, says of the Danes, that they have made a profession thereof from antiquity, and are the first upon record that brought their wassel bowls and elbowe deepe healthes into this land.”—Douce. Roger Ascham, in one of his Letters,

1 ‘To season, for to infuse,’ says Warburton. ‘It is more than to infuse, it is to infix in such a manner that it may never wear out,’ says Johnson. But hear one of the poet's contemporaries:—‘To season, to temper wisely, to make more pleasant and acceptable.’—Baret. This is the sense required, and is a better commentary than the conjectures of the learned critics, Warburton and Johnson, could supply. Thus in Act ii. Sc. 1, Polonius says to Reynaldo, ‘You may season it in the charge.’ And in a former scene Horatio says:—

‘Season your admiration for a while.’

2 Wait.

3 i. e. untried, inexperienced.

4 Shakespeare makes Polonius play on the equivocal use of the word tender, which was anciently used in the sense of regard or respect, as well as in that of offer. The folio reads, ‘roaming it thus?’ and the quarto, ‘wrong it thus.’

5 Ophelia uses fashion for manner; and Polonius equivocates upon the word, taking it in its usual acceptation, for a transient practice.

6 This was a proverbial phrase. There is a collection of epigrams under that title: the woodcock being accounted a witless bird, from a vulgar notion that it had no brains. ‘Springes to catch woodcocks’ means ‘arts to entrap simplicity.’

7 ‘How prodigal the tongue lends the heart vows,’ 4to. 1603.

8 i. e. ‘be more difficult of access, and let the suits to you for that purpose be of higher respect, than a command to parley.’ How Johnson could conceive entreatments to signify company, conversation, I am at a loss to imagine.

9 i. e. with a longer line; a horse fastened by a string to a stake, is lithered: figuratively, with more licence.

10 i. e. panders: Brokage and to broke was anciently to deal in business of an amatory nature by procurement. Thus in A Lover's Complaint:—

‘Know vows are ever brokers to defiling.’

Soil our addition;¹ and indeed it takes
From our achievements, though perform'd at height,
The pith and marrow of our attribute.
So, oft it chances in particular men,
That, for some vicious mole² of nature in them,
As, in their birth, (wherein they are not guilty, Since nature cannot choose his origin,)
By the o'ergrowth of some complexion,³
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason;
Or by some habit, that too much o'erleavens
The form of plausive manners;—that these men,—
Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect;
Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,⁴—
Their virtues else, (be they as pure as grace,
As infinite as man may undergo,)
Shall in the general censure⁵ take corruption
From that particular fault: The dram of bale
Doth all the noble substance often doubt⁶
To his own scandal.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!

Ham. Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,⁸
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell,
Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable⁹ shape,
That I will speak to thee: I'll call thee, Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me:
Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell,
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements! why the sepulchre,
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,¹⁰
Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again! What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel¹¹
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition,¹²
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?
Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

says, 'The Emperor of Germany, who had his head in the glass five times as long as any of us, never drank less than a good quart at once of Rhenish wine.' See also Howel's Letters, 8vo. 1726, p. 236. Muffet's Health's Improvement, 4to. 1635, p. 294. Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ, 8vo. 1804, vol. i. p. 349.

1 i. e. characterize us by a swinish epithet.

2 i. e. spot, blemish.

3 Complexion for humour. By complexion our ancestors understood the constitutions or affections of the body.

4 i. e. the influence of the planet supposed to govern our birth, &c.

5 i. e. judgment, opinion.

6 The last paragraph of this speech stands in the quarto editions thus:—

————— the dram of eale
Doth all the noble substance of a doubt
To his own scandal.⁷

Steevens reads:—

————— The dram of base

Doth all the noble substance often dout [i. e. do out.]
To his own scandal.⁷

Malone proposed:—

————— The dram of base

Doth all the noble substance of worth dout
To his own scandal.⁷

I see no reason why dout should be substituted for doubt. The editors have unwarrantably made the same substitution in King Henry V. Act iv. Sc. 2, and then cite it as a precedent. Mr. Boswell has justly observed, that to doubt may mean to bring into doubt or suspicion; many words similarly formed are used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. Thus to fear is to create fear; to pale is to make pale; to cease is to cause to cease, &c. I have followed the emendation in other respects, though I have ventured to read bale (i. e. evil) instead of base, as nearer to the reading of the first edition.

7 Hamlet's speech to the apparition of his father seems to consist of three parts. When he first sees the spectre, he fortifies himself with an invocation:—

'Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!'

As the spectre approaches, he deliberates with himself,

Mar. Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee;¹³
And, for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself;
It waves me forth again;—I'll follow it. [lord,

Hor. What, if it tempt you toward the flood, my
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles¹⁴ o'er his base into the sea?
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,¹⁵
And draw you into madness? think of it:
The very place puts toys¹⁶ of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still:

Go on, I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,

And makes each petty artery in this body

As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.—

[Ghost beckons.

Still am I call'd;—unhand me, gentlemen;—

[Breaking from them.

By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets¹⁷ me:

I say, away;—Go on, I'll follow thee.

[Exeunt Ghost and HAMLET.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after:—To what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark.

Hor. Heaven will direct it.¹⁸

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.

[Exeunt.

and determines that, whatever it be, he will venture to address it:—

'Be thou a spirit of health,' &c.

This he says while his father's spirit is advancing; he then, as he had determined, speaks to him, and calls him:

————— Hamlet,

King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me?

[Johnson.

8 'Art thou a god, a man, or else a ghost?

Com'st thou from heaven, where bliss and solace dwell?

Or from the air cold-engendering coast?

Or from the darksome dungeon-hold of hell?

[Acrostus, or After Wit, 1604.

9 Questionable must not be understood in its present acceptance of doubtful, but as conversable, inviting question or conversation; this was the most prevalent meaning of the word in Shakespeare's time.

10 Quarto 1603—interr'd.

11 It appears from Olaus Wormius, cap. vii. that it was the custom to bury the Danish kings in their armour.

12 Frame of mind.

13 'I do not estimate my life at the value of a pin.'

14 i. e. overhangs his base. Thus in Sidney's Arcadia, b. i.—'Hills lift up their beetle brows, as if they would overlook the pleasantness of their under prospect.'—The verb to beetle is apparently of Shakespeare's creation.

15 'To deprive your sovereignty of reason,' signifies to take from you or dispossesses you of the command of reason. We have similar instances of raising the idea of virtues or qualities by giving them rank, in Banquo's 'royalty of nature'; and even in this play we have 'nobility of love,' and 'dignity of love.'

16 i. e. whims.

17 'Villains, set down the corse, or by St. Paul

I'll make a corse of him that disobeya.'

[King Richard III. Act i. Sc. 1.

To let in old language is to hinder, to stay, to obstruct; and still a current term in leases and other legal instruments.

18 Marcellus answers Horatio's question, 'To what issue will this come?' and Horatio also answers himself with pious resignation, 'Heaven will direct it.'

SCENE V. A more remote Part of the Platform.Re-enter Ghost and HAMLET.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me? speak, I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come, When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night;
And, for the day, confin'd to fast in fires,¹
Till the foul crimes, done in my days of nature,
Are burn'd and purg'd away.² But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison house,
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young blood;
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres;³

Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine:⁴
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.—List, list, O, list!—
If thou didst ever thy dear father love,

Ham. O, heaven!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.⁵

Ham. Murder?

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know it; that I, with wings as swift

As meditation, or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;
And duller should'st thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf,⁶

1 The first quarto reads:—

'Confin'd in flaming fire.'

The spirit being supposed to feel the same desires and appetites as when clothed in the flesh, the pains and punishments promised by the ancient moral teachers are often of a sensual nature. Chaucer in the Persones Tale says, 'The misse of hell shall be in defeaute of mete and drinke.'

'Thou shalt lye in frost and fire,

With sickness and hunger,' &c.

The Wyll of the Devyll, blk. l.

2 Gawin Douglas really changes the Platonic hell into 'the punition of the saulis in purgatory.' Dr. Farmer thus compressed his account:—'It is a nedeful thyng to suffer panis and torment;—sum in the wyndis, sum under the watter, and in the fire uther sum: thus the mony vices,

Contrakkit in the corpis be done away
And purgit.'

3 'How have mine eyes out of their spheres been stued

In the distraction of this madding fever.'

Sh. Son. 108.

4 Vide note on The Comedy of Errors, Act iii. Sc. 2. It is porpentine in the old editions in every instance. Fretful is the reading of the folio; the quartos read fearful. The irascible nature of the animal is noted in a curious passage of the Speculum Vitæ, by Richard Rolle, MS.:—

'That beest is felle and sone is wrath,
And when he is greved he wol do scathe;
For when he tenes [angers] he launches out felly
The sharpe pinnes in his body.'

5 There is an allusion to the ghost in this play, or in an older one of the same name, by Lodge, in his Wit's Miserie and the World's Madness, 1596. He describes one of his Devils, by name Hate Virtue, as 'a foule Would'st thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear:

'Tis given out, that sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark

Is by a forged process of my death
Rankly abus'd: but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life,⁷
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetic soul! my uncle!

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,
(O, wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce!) won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming virtuous queen:

O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!
From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage; and to decline
Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven;
So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

But soft! methinks, I scent the morning air;
Brief let me be:—Sleeping within mine orchard,
My custom always of the afternoon,
Upon my secure⁸ hour thy uncle stole,

With juice of cursed hebenon⁹ in a vial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distilment: whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
And curd¹⁰ like eager¹¹ droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine,
And a most instant tetter bark'd about,
Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd;¹¹
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,

lubber, who looks as pale as the vizard of the Ghost, which cried so miserably at the theatre, Hamlet, revenge.'

6 The folio reads—rats itself. &c. In the Humorous Lieutenant, by Beaumont and Fletcher, we have:—

'This dull root pluck'd from Lethe's flood.'

Oway has a similar thought:—

'—like the coarse and useless dunghill weed
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow.'

7 Quarto 1603—heart.

8 This is also a Latinism, securus, quiet, or unguarded.

9 Hebenon may probably be derived from henbane, the oil of which, according to Pliny, dropped into the ears, disturbs the brain: and there is sufficient evidence that it was held poisonous by our ancestors. In Anton's Satires, 1606, we have:—

'The poison'd henbane, whose cold juice doth kill.'

And Drayton, in his Baron's Wars, p. 51:—

'The poisoning henbane and the mandrake dread.'
The French name comes near in sound, hannebane. It is, however, possible that poisonous qualities may have been ascribed to ebony; called ebene, and ebeno, by old English writers. Marlowe, in his Jew of Malta, speaking of noxious things, says:—

'—The blood of Hydra, Lerna's bane,
The juice of hebon, and cocus' breath.'

The French word hebenon, which would be applied to any thing made from ebony, comes indeed very close to the hebenon of Shakspeare. In confirmation of my conjecture, I find the newly discovered quarto, 1603, reads—hebona.

10 In Sc. iv. we have eager air for sharp biting air. Eger, (says Baret,) sower, sharp, acidus, aigre.

11 Quarto, 1603, deprived. I have elsewhere remarked that to despatch and to rid were synonymous in Shakspeare's time.

Unhousel'd,¹ disappointed,² unanel'd;³
 No reckoning made, but sent to my account
 With all my imperfections on my head;
 O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!
 If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
 Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
 A couch for luxury and damned incest.
 But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act,
 Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
 Against thy mother aught; leave her to heaven,
 And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
 To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
 The glowworm shows the matin to be near,
 And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire:⁴
 Adieu, adieu, adieu! remember me. [Exit.

Ham. O, all you host of heaven! O, earth! What else?

And shall I couple hell?—O, fie!—Hold, hold, my heart;

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
 But bear me stiffly up!—Remember thee?
 Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
 In this distracted globe.⁵ Remember thee?
 Yea, from the tables of my memory⁶
 I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
 All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
 That youth and observation copied there;
 And thy commandment all alone shall live
 Within the book and volume of my brain,
 Unmix'd with baser matter: yea, by heaven!
 O most pernicious woman!
 O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!
 My tables,—meet it is, I set it down,
 That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;
 At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark:

[Writing.

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word:⁷

It is, Adieu, adieu! remember me.

I have sworn't.

Hor. [Within.] My lord, my lord,——

Mar. [Within.] Lord Hamlet,——

Hor. [Within.] Heaven secure him!

Ham. So be it!

Mar. [Within.] Illo, ho, ho, my lord!

Ham. Illo, ho, ho, boy! come, bird, come.⁸

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Mar. How is't, my noble lord?

Hor. What news, my lord?

Ham. O wonderful!

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No;

You will reveal it.

1 Unhousel'd is without having received the sacrament. Thus in Hormanni Vulgaria, 1519:—'He is departed without ehryste and housyll.' And in Speculum Vitæ, MS. it is a sin—

'To receive nat once in the years
Housel and schrifte with conscience clere.'

2 Disappointed is the same as unappointed, and may be explained unprepared. A man well furnished for an enterprise is said to be well appointed. In Measure for Measure, Isabella addresses her brother, who is condemned to die, thus:—

'Therefore your best appointment make with speed.'

3 Unanel'd is without extreme unction. Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, edit. 1824, p. 324:—'Then we began to put him in mind of Christ's passion; and sent for the abbot of the place to aneal him.' 'The fyfth sacrament is anoynting of seke men, the whiche oyle is halowed of the byshop, and mynystred by preestes that ben of lawfull age, in grete peryll of dethe: in lyghtnes and abatynge of theyr sikenes, yf God wyll that they lyve; and in forgyveynge of theyr venyal synnes and releasyng of theyr payne, yf they shal deye.'—The Feestyval, fol. 171.

4 Uneffectual, i. e. shining without heat. The use of to pale as a verb is rather unusual, but not peculiar to Shakspeare. It is to be found in Chaucer and our elder writers.

5 I. e. in this head confused with thought.

6 Thus in the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act iv. Sc. i:—

And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,
 And keep no tell-tale in his memory.'

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How say you, then; would heart of man once think it?

But you'll be aceret,——

Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Ham. There's ne'er a villain, dwelling in all Denmark,

But he's an arrant knave.

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave,

To tell us this.

Ham. Why, right; you are in the right;

And so, without more circumstance at all,

I hold it fit, that we shake hands, and part:

You, as your business, and desire, shall point you;—

For every man hath business, and desire,

Such as it is,—and, for my own poor part,

Look you, I will go pray.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my lord.

Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily; yes,

'Faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick,⁹ but there is, Ho ratio,

And much offence too. Touching this vision here,

It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you:

For your desire to know what is between us,

O'ermaster it as you may. And now, good friends,

As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,

Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord?

We will.

Ham. Never make known what you have seen to-night.

Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith,

My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ha, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there, true-penny?

Come on,—you hear this fellow in the cellarage,—

Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen,

Swear by my sword.¹⁰

'Tables or books, or registers for memorie of things,' were then used by all ranks, and contained prepared leaves from which what was written with a silver style could easily be effaced.

7 The quarto 1603 has—'Now to the words.' By 'Now to my word,' Hamlet means now to my motto, my word of remembrance; or as it is expressed by King Richard III. word of courage. Steevens asserted that the allusion is to the military watchword. A word, motto, or motto, was any short sentence, such as is inscribed on a token, or under a device or coat of arms. It was a common phrase. See Ben Jonson's Works, by Mr. Gifford, vol. ii. p. 102.

8 This is the call which falconers use to their hawk in the air when they would have him come down to them. Thus in Tyro's Roaring Megge, 1598:—

'Yet ere I journe, Ile go to see the kye,

Come, come, bird, come: pox on you, you can mute.'

9 Warburton has ingeniously defended Shakspeare for making the Danish prince swear by St. Patrick, by observing that the whole northern world had their learning from Ireland. It is, however, more probable that the poet seized the first popular imprecation that came to his mind, without regarding whether it suited the country or character of the person to whom he gave it.

10 The custom of swearing by the sword, or rather by the cross at the upper end of it, is very ancient. In the Soiloquy of Roland, addressed to his sword, the cross which the guard and handle form is not forgotten:—'Capulo eburneo candidissime, cruce aurea splendidissime,' &c.—Turpini de Gestis Carol. Mag. cap. 21. The name of Jesus was not unfrequently inscribed on the handle. The allusions to this custom are very

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Hic ei ubique! then we'll shift our ground :—
Come hither, gentlemen,
And lay your hands again upon my sword :
Swear by my sword,
Never to speak of this that you have heard.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear by his sword.

Ham. Well said, old mole! canst work i' the earth so fast?

A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good friends.

Hor. O, day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

But come ;—

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy!

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on,—

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

As, Well, well, we know ;—or, We could, an if we would ;—or, If we list to speak ;—or, There be, an

if they might ;—

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note

That you know aught of me :—This not to do, swear ;¹

So grace and mercy at your most need help you!

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! So, gentlemen,

With all my love I do commend me to you :

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is

May do, to express his love and friendship to you,

God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together ;

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.

The time is out of joint ;—O, cursed spite!

That ever I was born to set it right!

Nay, come, let's go together.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Room in Polonius' House. Enter
POLONIUS and REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry

Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

Pol. Marry, well said : very well said. Look you, sir,

Inquire me first what Danskers³ are in Paris ;

And how, and who, what means, and where they keep, numerous in our old writers, and Warburton has noticed it in Bartholinus De Causis Contempt. Mort. apud Danos. Simon Maloi, in his very curious book Dierum Canicularium, mentions that the ancient Germans swore by the sword and death. Leonato, in The Winter's Tale, Act ii. Sc. 3, says :—

Thou'lt swear by this sword,

Thou wilt perform my bidding."

1 The quarto 1604 reads—'this do swear.' The construction of this passage is rather embarrassed, but the sense is sufficiently obvious without explanation.

2 'Shakespeare has riveted our attention to the ghost by a succession of forcible circumstances : by the previous report of the terrified sentinels,—by the solemnity of the hour at which the phantom walks,—by its martial stride and discriminating armour, visible only per incertam lunam, by the glimpses of the moon,—by its long taciturnity, by its preparation to speak, when interrupted by the morning cock,—by its mysterious reserve throughout its first scene with Hamlet,—by his resolute departure with it, and the subsequent anxiety of his attendants,—by its conducting him to a solitary angle of the platform, by its voice from beneath the earth,—and by its unexpected burst on us in the closet.

What company, at what expense ; and finding, By this encompassment and drift of question, That they do know my son, come you more nearer Than your particular demands will touch it : Take you, as 'twere, some distant knowledge of him ;

As thus,—I know his father, and his friends,

And, in part, him ;—Do you mark this, Reynaldo ?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. And, in part, him ;—but, you may say, not well :

But, if't be he I mean, he's very wild ;

Addicted so and so ;—and there put on him

What forgeries you please ; marry, none so rank

As may dishonour him ; take heed of that ;

But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,

As are companions noted and most known

To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing,⁴ swearing, quarrelling,

Drabbing :—You may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. 'Faith, no ; as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him,

That he is open to incontinency ;

That's not my meaning : but breathe his faults so quantly,

That they may seem the taints of liberty ;

The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind ;

A savageness⁵ in unreclaimed blood,

Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,—

Pol. Wherefore should you do this ?

Rey. Ay, my lord,

I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift ;

And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant :

You laying these slight sullies on my son,

As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' the working,

Mark you,

Your party in converse, him you would sound,

Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes,

The youth you breathe of, guilty, be assur'd,

He closes with you in this consequence ;

Good sir, or so ;⁶ or friend, or gentleman,—

According to the phrase, or the addition,

Of man, and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he this,—He does—

What was I about to say ?—By the mass, I was about to say something :—Where did I leave ?

Rey. At, closes in the consequence.

Pol. At, closes in the consequence,—Ay marry ;

He closes with you thus :—I know the gentleman ;

I saw him yesterday, or t'other day,

Or then, or then ; with such, or such ; and, as you say,

There was he gaming ; there o'ertook in his rouse ;

There falling out at tennis : or, perchance,

I saw him enter such a house of sale,

Hamlet's late interview with the spectre must in particular be regarded as a stroke of dramatic artifice. The phantom might have told his story in the presence of the officers and Horatio, and yet have rendered itself as inaudible to them as it afterwards did to the queen. But suspense was the poet's object : and never was it more effectually created than in the present instance. Six times has the royal semblance appeared, but till now has been withheld from speaking. For this event we have waited with impatient curiosity, unaccompanied by lassitude, or remitted attention.—Steevens.

3 l. e. Danes. Warner, in his Albion's England, calls Denmark Danske.

4 'The cunning of fencers is now applied to quarrelling : they think themselves no men, if for stirring of a straw, they prove not their valour upon some bodies fleshe.'—Gosson's Schole of Abuse, 1579.

5 'A wildness of untamed blood, such as youth is generally assailed by.'

6 So, for so forth, as in the last act :—'Six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hanger, and so.'

(Videlicet, a brothel,) or so forth.

See you now ;
Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth :
And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlances, and with assays of bias,¹
By indirections find directions out ;
So, by my former lecture and advice,
Shall you my son : You have me, have you not ?

Reg. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi' you ; fare you well.

Reg. Good my lord,—

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.²

Reg. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his music.

Reg. Well, my lord. [Exit.

Enter OPHELIA.

Pol. Farewell !—How now, Ophelia ? what's the matter ?

Oph. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted !

Pol. With what, in the name of heaven ?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbrac'd ;
No hat upon his head ; his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd and down-gyved³ to his ankle ;
Pale as his shirt ; his knees knocking each other ;
And with a look so piteous in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of hell,
To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love ?

Oph. My lord, I do not know ;
But, truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he ?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard ;
Then goes he to the length of all his arm ;
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so ;
At last,—a little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,—
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,⁴
And end his being : That done, he lets me go :
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes ;
For out o' doors he went without their help,
And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me ; I will go seek the king.
This is the very ecstasy of love ;
Whose violent property foredoes⁵ itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings,
As oft as any passion under heaven,
That does afflict our natures. I am sorry,—
What, have you given him any hard words of late ?

1 i. e. by tortuous devices and side essays. 'To assay, or rather essay, of the French word essayer, tentare,' says Barlet.

2 i. e. In your own person, personally add your own observations of his conduct to these inquiries respecting him.

3 Hanging down like the loose cincture which confines the letters or gyves round the ancles.

4 i. e. his breast. 'The bulk or breast of a man, thorax, la poitrine.'—Barlet. Thus in King Richard III. Act i. Sc. 4, Clarence says:—

' ————— but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth,—
But smother'd it within my panting bulk.'

Malone cites this, and the following passage, and yet explains it all his body !—

' ————— her heart
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.'

Shakespeare. Lucrece.

5 To foredo and to undo were synonymous. Thus in Othello :—

' That either makes me or foredoes me quite.'

6 To quote, is to note, to mark. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece :—

' Yea, the illiterate

Will quote my loathed trespass in my looks.'

This word in the quarto is written coted, which was the old orthography of quoted.

Oph. No, my good lord ; but, as you did command,
I did repel his letters, and denied
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am sorry, that with better heed and judgment,
I had not quoted⁶ him : I fear'd, he did but trifle,
And meant to wreck thee ; but, beshrew my jealousy !
It seems, it is as proper to our age
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion.⁷ Come, go we to the king ;
This must be known ; which, being kept close, might move
More grief to hide, than hate to utter love.⁸
Come.⁹ [Exeunt.

SCENE II. A Room in the Castle. Enter King, Queen, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern !

Moreover that we much did long to see you,
The need, we have to use you, did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation ; so I call it,
Since not¹⁰ the exterior nor the inward man
Remembers that it was : What it should be,
More than his father's death, that thus hath put him
So much from the understanding of himself,
I cannot dream¹¹ of : I entreat you both,
That,—being of so young days brought up with him :
And, since, so neighbour'd to his youth and humour,¹²

That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court
Some little time : so by your companies
To draw him on to pleasures ; and to gather,
So much as from occasion you may glean,
Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus,¹³
That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of
you ;

And, sure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To show us so much gentry,¹⁴ and good will,
As to expend your time with us awhile,
For the supply and profit of our hope,¹⁵
Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,¹⁶
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. But we both obey
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,¹⁷
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

7 This is not the remark of a weak man. It is always the fault of a little mind made artful by long commerce with the world. The quartos read, 'By heaven, it is as proper,' &c.

8 'This must be made known to the king, for (being kept secret,) the hiding Hamlet's love might occasion more mischief to us from him and the queen, than the uttering or revealing it will occasion hate and resentment from Hamlet.' Johnson, whose explanation this is, attributes the obscurity to the poet's 'affectation of concluding the scene with a couplet.' There would surely have been more affectation in deviating from the universally established custom.

9 Folio omits come.

10 Quarto—sith nor.

12 Quarto—haviour.

13 This line is omitted in the folio.

14 Gentry for gentle courtesy. 'Gentlemanliness or gentry, kindness, or natural goodness. Generositas.'—Barlet.

15 Supply and profit is aid and advantage.

16 i. e. over us.

17 Folio omits but.
18 There is no ground for the assertion that this metaphorical expression is derived from bending a bow. See Much Ado About Nothing, Act ii. Sc. 3. Hamlet in a future scene says:—

'They fool me to the very top of my bent.'
i. e. to the utmost of my inclination or disposition.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosencrantz;

And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed son.—Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence, and our practices,
Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. Ay, Amen!

[Exeunt ROS. GUIL. and some Attendants.
Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God, and to my gracious king;
And I do think (or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail¹ of policy so sure
As it hath² us'd to do) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit³ to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in. [Exit POLONIUS.

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt, it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our overhasty marriage.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

King. Well, we shall sift him.—Welcome, my good friends!

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Pol. Most fair return of greetings and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress

His nephew's levies; which to him appear'd

To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack;

But, better look'd into, he truly found

It was against your highness: Whereat griev'd—

That so his sickness, age, and impotence,

Was falsely borne in hand,⁴—sends out arrests

On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys;

Receives rebuke from Norway; and, in fine,

Makes vow before his uncle, never more

To give the assay⁵ of arms against your majesty.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,

Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee;⁶

And his commission, to employ those soldiers,

So levied as before, against the Polack:

With an entreaty, herein further shown,

[Gives a Paper.

1 i. e. the trace or track. Vestigium. It is that vestige, whether of footmarks or scent, which enables the hunter to follow the game.

3 Folio—news. By fruit dessert is meant.

4 i. e. deluded, imposed on, deceived by false appearances. It is used several times by Shakspeare; Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 1; Much Ado about Nothing, Act iv. Sc. 1; Cymbeline, Sc. ult.

5 Malone refers to the custom of taking the assay of wine, &c. before it was drunk by princes and other great persons, to ascertain that it was not poisoned. But the expression in the text has nothing to do with that custom. To give the assay of arms, is 'to attempt or essay any thing in arms, or by force. Acting arms.' I have to request the reader's patience for this superfluous note, but it is really sometimes impossible to resist exposing such mistakes.

6 That is, the king gave his nephew a feud or fee in land of that annual value. The quartos read three score thousand.

7 i. e. to inquire. 'Polonius is a man bred in courts, exercised in business, stored with observation, confident in his knowledge, proud of his eloquence, and declining into dotage. His mode of oratory is designed to ridicule the practice of those times, of prefaces that made no introduction, and of method that embarrassed rather than explained. This part of his character is accidental, it might please you to give quiet pass Through your dominions for this enterprise;

On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well:
And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.
Mean time, we thank you for your well-took labour:
Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:
Most welcome home!

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

Pol. This business is well ended.
My liege, and madam, to expostulate⁷
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night, night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.
Therefore,—since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief: Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad:
But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.

That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pity;

And pity 'tis, 'tis true: a foolish figure;

But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let us grant him, then: and now remains,

That we find out the cause of this effect;

Or, rather say, the cause of this defect;

For this effect, defective, comes by cause:

Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perpend.

I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;

Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,

Hath given me this: Now gather and surmise.

—To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautified⁸ Ophelia,—

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified is a vile phrase; but you shall hear.—Thus:

In her excellent white bosom, these, &c.⁹

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.—

Doubt thou, the stars are fire; [Reads.

Doubt, that the sun doth move:

Doubt truth to be a liar;

But never doubt I love.

O, dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers; I have not art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best,

O, most best, believe it. Adieu.

Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst tal, the rest natural. Such a man is positive and confident, because he knows that his mind was once strong, and knows not that it is become weak. Such a man excels in general principles, but fails in particular application. He is knowing in retrospect, and ignorant in foresight. While he depends upon his memory, and can draw from his depositaries of knowledge, he utters weighty sentences, and gives useful counsel: but as the mind in its enfeebled state cannot be kept long busy and intent, the old man is subject to the dereliction of his faculties, he loses the order of his ideas, and entangles himself in his own thoughts, till he recovers the leading principle, and fall into his former train. The idea of dotage encroaching upon wisdom, will solve all the phenomena of the character of Polonius.—Johnson.

8 Vile as Polonius esteems the phrase, from its equivocal meaning, Shakspeare has used it again in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

—Seeing you are beautified

With goodly shape, &c.

Nash, in his dedication of Christ's Tears over Jerusalem, 1594:—'To the most beautified Lady Elizabeth Cary.' It is not uncommon in dedications and encomiastic verses of the poet's age.

9 See note on The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1. Formerly the word these was usually added at the end of the superscription of letters. The folio reads:—'These in her excellent white bosom these.'

King. But how hath she Receiv'd his love?
Pol. What do you think of me?
King. As of a man faithful and honourable.
Pol. I fain would prove so. But what might you think,
 When I had seen this hot love on the wing,
 (As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,
 Before my daughter told me,) what might you,
 Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,
 If I had play'd the desk or table-book;
 Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb;
 Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
 What might you think? no, I went round² to work,
 And my young mistress thus did I bespeak;
Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy star;³
This must not be: and then I precepts gave her,
 That she should lock herself from his resort,
 Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
 Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;
 And he, repulsed, (a short tale to make,)
 Fell into a sadness; then into a fast;
 Thence to a watch; thence into a weakness;
 Thence to a lightness; and, by this declension,
 Into the madness wherein now he raves,⁴
 And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think, 'tis this?
Queen. It may be, very likely.
Pol. Hath there been such a time, (I'd fain know that,)

That I have positively said, 'Tis so,
 When it prov'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.
Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise:
 [Pointing to his Head and Shoulder.
 If circumstances lead me, I will find
 Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
 Within the centre.

King. How may we try it further?
Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours together,
 Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does, indeed.
Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him:
 Be you and I behind an arras then;
 Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
 And be not from his reason fall'n thereon,

1 'If I had play'd the desk, or table-book;
 Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb.'
 That is 'If I had acted the part of depository of their secret loves, or given my heart a hint to be mute about their passion.' The quartos read—'given my heart a working;' and the modern editors follow this reading:
 I prefer the reading of the folio. 'Connivencia, a winking at; a surference: a feigning not to see or know.'
 The pleonasm, mute and dumb, is found in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'And in my hearing be you mute and dumb.'
 2 Plainly, roundly, without reserve. Polonius, in the third act, says, 'be round with him.'

3 This was changed to sphere in the 4to. 1632. and that reading is followed by the modern editions. 'Out of thy star,' is placed above thee by destiny. We have fortune's star in a former scene. Aumerle in King Richard III. says:—

'Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars?
 4 'The ridicule of this character is here admirably sustained. He would not only be thought to have discovered this intrigue by his own sagacity, but to have remarked all the stages of Hamlet's disorder, from his sadness to his raving, as regularly as his physician could have done; when all the while the madness was only feigned. The humour of this is exquisite from a man who tells us, with a confidence peculiar to small politicians, that he could find—

'Where truth was hid, though it were hid indeed
 Within the centre.'
Warburton.
 5 i. e. accost, address him. See Twelfth Night, Act
 i. Sc. 3.

6 The old copies read—'being a good kissing car-ron.' The emendation is Warburton's, who has accompanied it with a long comment, in which he endeavours to prove that Shakespeare intended the passage as a vindication of the ways of Providence in permitting evil to abound in the world. He observes that Shakespeare 'had an art not only of acquainting the audience with

Let me be no assistant for a state,
 But keep a farm, and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter HAMLET, reading.

Queen. But, look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away;
 I'll board⁵ him presently:—O, give me leave.—

[Exit KING, QUEEN, and Attendants.
 How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-'a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest, as this world goes,
 is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god, kissing carrion,⁶—Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk i' the sun: conception is a blessing; but as your daughter may conceive,⁷—friend, look to't.

Pol. How say you by that? [Aside.] Still harping on my daughter:—yet he knew me not at first;
 he said, I was a fishmonger: He is far gone, far gone: and, truly, in my youth I suffered much extremity for love: very near this. I'll speak to him again.—What do you read, my lord?

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean the matter that you read, my lord.

Ham. Slanders, sir: for the satirical rogue⁸ says here, that old men have gray beards: that their faces are wrinkled; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams: All of which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for yourself, sir, should be as old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madness, yet there's method in it. [Aside.] Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

what his actors say, but what they think.' This emendation, and the moral comment on it, delighted Dr. Johnson, who says, 'that it almost sets the critic on a level with the author!' There was certainly much ingenuity in the emendation (which is unquestionably right) as well as in the argument, but the latter appears totally irrelevant and strained, and certainly was rather intended to show the skill and ingenuity of the critic than to raise the character of the poet, or display his true meaning. Warburton pointed out the same kind of expression in Cymbeline:—'Common-kissing Titan.' And Malone has adduced the following passage from the play of King Edward III. 1596, which Shakespeare had certainly seen:—

'The freshest summer's day doth soonest taint
 The loathed carrion that it seems to kiss.'

7 The folio reads—'Conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceive.' Steevens thinks that there is a play upon words here, as in the first scene of King Lear:—

'Kent. I cannot conceive you, sir.
 Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could.'

But the simple meaning may be, 'though conception in general be a blessing, yet as your daughter may chance to conceive that it may be a calamity, every thing being so corrupt or sinful in the world;' he therefore counsels Polonius not to let his daughter 'walk
 i' the sun,' i. e. be too much exposed to the corrupting influence of the world. The abrupt transitions and obscurities of Hamlet's language are intended to give Polonius a notion of his insanity.

8 By 'the satirical rogue' Warburton will have it that Shakespeare means Juvenal, and refers to a passage on old age in his tenth satire. Dr. Farmer states that there was a translation of that satire by Sir John Beaumont, but is uncertain whether it was printed in Shakespeare's time. The defects of age were, however, a common topic of moral reflection.

Ham. Into my grave?

Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air.—How pregnant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.—My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.¹

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal; except my life, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Pol. You go to seek the Lord Hamlet; there he is.

Ros. God save you, sir!

[To POLONIUS.
[Exit POLONIUS.]

Guil. My honour'd lord!—

Ros. My most dear lord!—

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both?

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guil. Happy, in that we are not overhappy; On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoe?

Ros. Neither, my lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

Guil. 'Faith, her privates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? O, most true; she is a strumpet. What news?

Ros. None, my lord; but that the world is grown honest.

Ham. Then is doomsday near: But your news is not true.² [Let me question more in particular: What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Guil. Prison, my lord!

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

Ros. Then is the world one.

Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confines, wards, and dungeons; Denmark being one of the worst.

Ros. We think not so, my lord.

Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why, then your ambition makes it one; 'tis too narrow for your mind.

Ham. O God! I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space; were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.³

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars, bodies; and our monarchs, and outstretch'd heroes, the beggars' shadows:⁴ Shall we to the court? for, by my fay,⁵ I cannot reason.

Ros. Guil. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended.] But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?⁶

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear, a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, come; deal justly with me: come, come; nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Any thing—but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know, the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. What say you? [To GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you; [Aside. —if you love me, hold not off.

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen mould no feather. I have of late, (but wherefore, I know not,) lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercises: and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me to be a sterile promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire,⁷ why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form, and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, no nor woman neither; though, by your smiling, you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there is no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, then, when I said, Man delights not me?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten⁸ entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted⁹ them on the way; and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king, shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil, and target: the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace: [the clown shall make those laugh, whose lungs are tickled o' the sere;¹⁰] and

7 To have an eye of any one is to have an inkling of his purpose, or to be aware of what he is about. It is still a common phrase. The first quarto has:—'Nay, then I see how the wind sets.'

8 'Look how the floor of heaven

Is thick inlaid with patins of bright gold.'

Merchant of Venice.

9 See Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. 5.

10 To cote is to pass alongside, to pass by:—

'—Marry, presently coted and outstript them.'

Return from Parnassus

'With that Hippomenes coted her.'

Golding's Ovid, Metam. ii.

It was a familiar hunting term, and its origin from a cote, French, is obvious.

11 The first quarto reads:—'The clown shall make them laugh that are tickled in the lungs.' The words as they now stand are in the folio. The meaning appears to be, the clown shall make even those laugh whose lungs are tickled with a dry cough, or huskiness;

1 This speech is abridged thus in the quartos:—

'I will leave him and my daughter. My lord,

I will take my leave of you.'

2 All within crotchets is wanting in the quarto copies.

3 Shakspeare has accidentally inverted the expression of Pindar, that the state of humanity is the dream of a shadow. 'Thus also Sir John Davies:—
Man's life is but a dreame, nay, less than so,
A shadow of a dreame.'

4 'If ambition is such an unsubstantial thing, then are our beggars (who at least can dream of greatness) the only things of substance, and monarchs and heroes, though appearing to fill such mighty space with their ambition, but the shadows of the beggars' dreams.' Johnson thought that Shakspeare designed 'a ridicule of those declamations against wealth and greatness, that seem to make happiness consist in poverty.'

5 See note on the Induction to Taming of a Shrew,

6 See note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3.

the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for't.—What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it, they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think, their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: But there is, sir, an airy² of children, little eyases,³ that cry out on the top of the question,⁴ and are most tyrannically clapped for't: these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages (so they call them,) that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What, are they children? who maintains them? how are they escoted?⁵ Will they pursue the quality,⁶ no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players (as it is most like, if their means are no better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. 'Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin, to tarre⁷ them on to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is it possible?

Guil. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.⁸

Ham. It is not very strange: for my uncle is by his merriment shall convert even their coughing into laughter. The same expression occurs in Howard's Defensive against the Poysen of supposed Prophecies, 1620, folio:—'Discovering the moods and humours of the vulgar sort to be so loose and tickle of the sear.'⁹

1 In the first quarto copy this passage stands thus:—

'Ham. How comes it that they travel? do they grow restle?

'Gil. No, my lord, their reputation holds as it was wont.

'Ham. How then?

'Gil. 'Faith, my lord, novelty carries it away, for the principal publicke audience that came to them, are turned to private plays, and to the humour of children.'

By this we may understand what Hamlet means in saying 'their inhibition comes of the late innovation,' i. e. their prevention or hinderance comes from the late innovation of companies of juvenile performers, as the children of the revels, the children of St. Paula, &c.—They have not relaxed in their endeavours to please, but this (brood) airy of little children are now the fashion, and have so abused the common stages as to deter many from frequenting them. Thus in Jack Drum's Entertainment, or Hasquill and Catherine, 1601:

'I sawe the children of Powles last night,
And troth they pleased me preutie prettie well,
The apes in time will do it handsomely.

'Pla. 'Faith,

I like the audience that frequentheth there
With much applause: a man shall not be chokt
With the stench of garlic, nor be pasted
To the barmy jacket of a beer-brewer.

'Bra. 'Tis a good gentle audience, and I hope
The boys will come one day in great request.'

2 i. e. a brood.

3 i. e. young nestlings; properly young unfledged hawks.

4 Question is speech, conversation. The meaning may therefore be, they cry out on the top of their voice.

5 i. e. paid.

6 i. e. profession. Mr. Gifford has remarked that 'this word seems more peculiarly appropriated to the profession of a player by our old writers.' But in Measure for Measure, Angelo, when the Bawd and Tupster are brought before him inquires what quality they are of. In the Two Gentlemen of Verona, the King of Denmark, and those, that would make mouths⁹ at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, a hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. 'Blood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Flourish of Trumpets within.

Guil. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come, then: the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply¹⁰ with you in this garb; lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome: but my uncle-father, and aunt-mother, are deceived.

Guil. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. I am but mad north-north west; when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw.¹¹

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern;—and you too, —at each ear a hearer: that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.

Ros. Happily, he's the second time come to them; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy, he comes to tell me of the players; mark it.—You say right, sir: o' Monday morning; 'twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you; When Roscius was an actor in Rome, —

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord

Ham. Buz, buz!¹²

Pol. Upon my honour, —

Ham. Then came each actor on his ass, —

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral [tragic-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral,¹³ scene indivisible, or poem unlimited:—Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Outlaws speak of men of our quality. And Sir Thomas Eliot, in his Platonic Dialogue, 1534:—'According to the profession or qualitee, wherein men have opinion that wisdom doth rest, so ought to be the form of living, countenance, and gesture.' He is speaking of philosophers.

'No longer than they can sing,' i. e. no longer than they keep the voices of boys, and sing in the choir.

7 i. e. set them on, a phrase borrowed from the setting on a dog. Thus in King John:—

'Like a dog that is compelled to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.'

8 i. e. carry all the world before them: there is perhaps an allusion to the Globe theatre, the sign of which is said to have been Hercules carrying the globe.

9 First copy, 'mops and moes.' Folio, 'mowes.'

10 'Let me comply with you in this garb.' Hammer, with his usual temerity, changed comply to compliment, and Steevens has contented himself with saying that he means 'to compliment with,' here and in a passage in the fifth act, 'He did comply with his dug before he sucked it,' where that sense would be even more absurd. He evidently never looked at the context. Hamlet has received his old schoolfellows with somewhat of the coldness of suspicion hitherto, but he now remembers that this is not courteous: He therefore rouses himself to give them a proper reception, 'Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then, the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me embrace you in this fashion: lest I should seem to give you a less courteous reception than I give the players, to whom I must behave with at least exterior politeness.' That to comply with was to embrace, will appear from the following passages in Herrick:—

—witty Ovid, by

Whom Corinna sits, and doth comply,
With iv'ry wrists, his laureat head, and steep
His eye in dew of kisses, while he sleeps.'

11 The original form of this proverb was undoubtedly 'To know a hawk from a heronshaw,' that is, to know a hawk from the heron which it pursues. The corruption is said to be as old as the time of Shakespeare.

12 Surely the commentators need not have expended their ingenuity on this common interjection.

13 The words within crotchets are not in the quartos.

Plautus too light for the law of writ¹ and the liberty: these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, Judge of Israel,—what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why—One fair daughter, and no more,
The which he loved passing well.²

Pol. Still on my daughter. [Aside.]

Ham. Am I not i' the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows then, my lord?

Ham. Why, As by lot, God wot, and then, you know, It came to pass, As most like it was.—The first row of the pious chanson³ will show you more; for look, my abridgment⁴ comes.

Enter Four or Five Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome, all;—I am glad to see thee well:—welcome, good friends.—O, old friend! Why, thy face is valenced⁵ since I saw thee last; Com'st thou to beard me in Denmark?—What! my young lady and mistress! By—r-lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven, than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine.⁶ Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring.⁷—Masters, you are all welcome. We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: We'll have a speech straight: Come, give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

1 Player. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once,—but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once: for the play, I remember, pleased not the million;⁸ 'twas caviare to the general;⁹ but it was, (as I received it, and others, whose judgments, in such matters, cried in the top of mine,) an excellent play: well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said, there were no sallets in the lines,¹⁰ to make the matter savoury: nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the author of affection;¹¹ but called it, an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved: 'twas Æneas' tale to Dido; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter: If it live in your memory, begin at this line; let me see, let me see;—

The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast,—

'tis not so; it begins with Pyrrhus.

*The ragged Pyrrhus,—he, whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble,
When he lay couched in the ominous horse.
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot
Now he is total gules; horribly trick'd¹²
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons;
Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets,
That lend a tyrannous and a damned light
To their lord's murder: Roasted in wrath, and fire,
And thus o'er-sized with coagulate gore,
With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus
Old grandsire Priam seeks; So proceed you.*

Pol. Fore God, my lord, well spoken; with good accent, and good discretion.

1 Player. Anon he finds him

*Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repugnant to command: Unequal match'd,
Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage, strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unnerv'd father falls. Then senseless Ilium, Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base; and with a hideous crash
Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear: for, lo! his sword
Which was declining on the milky head
Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick:
So as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood;
And, like a neutral to his will and matter,
Did nothing.*

*But, as we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack¹³ stand still*

1 Writ for writing, a common abbreviation, which is not yet obsolete: we still say holy writ, for the sacred writings. I should not have noticed this, but that there have been editors who thought that we should read, 'the law of writ.' The quarto of 1603 reads, 'for the law hath writ.' The modern editions have pointed this passage in the following manner:—'Scene indivisible, or poem unlimited; Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ, and the liberty, these are the only men.' I have adhered to the pointing of the quarto, because it appears to me that the law and the liberty of writing relates to Seneca and Plautus, and not to the players.

2 An imperfect copy of this ballad, of 'Jephthah, Judge of Israel,' was given to Dr. Percy by Steevens. See Reliques, ed. 1794, vol. i. p. 159. There is a more correct copy in Mr. Evan's Old Ballads, vol. i. p. 7, ed. 1810.

3 Pious chanson is the reading of the first folio; three of the quartos read pious; and the newly discovered quarto of 1603, 'the godly ballad;' which puts an end to controversy upon the subject. The first row is the first column. Every one is acquainted with the form of these old carols and ballads.

4 The folio reads, 'abridgments come.' My abridgment, i. e. who come to abridge my talk.

5 i. e. fringed with a beard.

6 A chopine, a kind of high shoe, or rather clog, worn by the Spanish and Italian ladies, and adopted at one time as a fashion by the English. Coriarte describes those worn by the Venetians as some of them 'half a yard high.' Bulwer, in his Artificial Changeling, complains of this fashion, as a monstrous affectation, 'wherein our ladies imitate the Venetian and Persian ladies.' That the fashion was originally of oriental origin seems very probable: there is a figure of a Turkish lady with chopines in Sandy's Travels; and another of a Venetian courtesan in the Habit Antichi, &c. di Cesare Vecellio.

Chapin is the Spanish name; and Cobarruvias countenances honest Tom Coriarte's account of the preposterous height to which some ladies carried them. He tells an old tale of their being invented to prevent women's gadding, being first made of wood, and very heavy; and that the ingenuity of the women overcame this inconvenience by substituting cork. Though they are mentioned under the name of cioppini by those who saw them in use in Venice, the dictionaries record them under the title of zoccoli. Cobarruvias asserts that they were made of zapino (deal) in Italy, and not of cork; and hence their name. But the Spanish doctors differ about the etymology. Perhaps Hamlet may have some allusion to the boy having grown so as to fill the place of a tragedy heroine, and so assumed the colturnus; which Puttenham described as 'high corked shoes, or pantofles, which they now call in Spaine and Italy shoppini.'

7 The old gold coin was thin and liable to crack. There was a ring or circle on it, within which the sovereign's head, &c. was placed; if the crack extended beyond this ring, it was rendered uncurrent: it was therefore a simile applied to any other debased or injured object. There is some humour in applying it to a cracked voice.

8 The quarto of 1603 vulgar.

9 'Twice caviare to the general.' Caviare is said to be the pickled roes of certain fish of the sturgeon kind, called in Italy caviale, and much used there and in other Catholic countries. Great quantities were prepared on the river Volga formerly. As a dish of high seasoning and peculiar flavour it was not relished by the many, i. e. the general. A fantastic fellow, described in Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, is said to be learning to eat macaroni, periwinkles, French beans, and caviare, and pretending to like them.

10 'There were no sallets in the lines.' The force of this phrase will appear from the following passage, cited by Steevens, from A Banquet of Jest, 1665:—'For junkets, joci, and for sallets, sales.' 'Sal, Salle, a pleasant and merry word, that maketh folke to laugh, and sometimes pricketh.'—Baret.

11 i. e. impeach the author with affectation in his style. In Love's Labour's Lost, Nathaniel tells the Pe-dant that his reasons have been 'witty without affectation.'

12 Gules, i. e. red, in the language of heraldry: to trick is to colour.

'With man's blood paint the ground; gules, gules.' Timon of Athens.

13 The rack is the clouds, formed by vaporous exha-

*The bold winds speechless,¹ and the orb below
As hush as death : anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the region : So, after Pyrrhus' pause,
A roused vengeance sets him new a work ;
And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars' armour, for'd for proof² eterne,
With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
Now falls on Priam.—
Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune ! All you gods,
In general synod, take away your power :
Break all the spokes and felloes from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven,
As low as to the fiends !*

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard.—
'Pr'ythee, say on :—He's for a jig,³ or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps :—say on : come to Hecuba.

1 Play. *But who, ah wo ! had seen the mobled⁴
queen*—

Ham. The mobled queen ?

Pol. That's good ; mobled queen is good.

1 Play. *Run barefoot up and down, threat'ning
the flames*

*With bisson⁵ rheum ; a clout upon that head,
Where late the diadem stood ; and, for a robe,
About her lank and all o'er-teemed loins,
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up ;
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,
'Gainst fortune's state would treason have pro-nounc'd :*

*But if the gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs :
The instant burst of clamour that she made,⁶
(Unless things mortal move them not at all),
Would have made milch⁷ the burning eye of heaven,
And passion in the gods.*

Pol. Look, whether he has not turn'd his colour, and has tears in his eyes.—'Pr'ythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well ; I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed ? Do you hear, let them be well used ; for they are the abstract, and brief chrono-nicles of the time : After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

lation. Johnson has chosen this passage, and one in Dryden of the same import, to exemplify the word which he explains, 'the clouds as they are driven by the winds.'

1 'Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth.'

Venus and Adonis.

2 'He's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry.' Giga, in Italian, was a fiddle, or crowd ; gigaro, a fiddler, or minstrel. Hence a jig, (first written gigge, though pronounced with a g soft, after the Italian), was a ballad, or ditty, sung to the fiddle. 'Frouola, a countrie gigge, or round, or country song or wanton verse.' As these itinerant minstrels proceeded, they made it a kind of farical dialogue ; and at length it came to signify a short merry interlude :—'Farce, the jigg at the end of an entrelude, wherein some pretie knaverie is acted.'
There are several of the old ballads and dialogues call'd Jigs in the Harleian Collection. Thus also, in the Fatal Contract, by Heintjes :—

'—we'll hear your jiggs,

How is your ballad titled ?

3 The folio reads mobled, an evident error of the press, for mobled, which means muffled. The queen is represented with 'a clout upon her head, and a blanket wrapt round her, caught up in the alarm of fear.'
We have the word in Ogilby's Fables :—

'Mobled nine days in my considering cap.'

And in Shirley's Gentleman of Venice :—

'The moon doth mobble up herself.'

4 Bisson is blind. Bisson rheum therefore is blinding tears.

5 'Would have made milch the burning eye of heaven.' By a hardy poetical license, this expression means, 'Would have filled with tears the burning eye of heaven.' To have 'made passion in the gods' would have been to move them to sympathy or compassion.

6 'The plays of Shakspeare, by their own power, must have given a different turn to acting, and almost

Ham. Odd's bodikin, man, much better : Use every man after his desert, and who shall 'scape whipping ? Use them after your own honour and dignity : The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

[Exit POLONIUS, with some of the Players.]

Ham. Follow him, friends : we'll hear a play tomorrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend ; can you play the murder of Gonzago ?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll have it to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't ?
could you not ?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.—Follow that lord ; and look you mock him not. [Exit Player.] My good friend [To Ros. and GUIL.] I'll leave you till night : you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord !

[Exit ROS. and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. Ay, so, good bye to you :—Now I am alone.

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I !
Is it not monstrous, that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
That from her working, all his visage wann'd ;
Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit ? And all for nothing ?
For Hecuba !

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her ? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue⁸ for passion,
That I have ? He would drown the stage with tears,
And cleave the general ear with horrid speech ;
Make mad the guilty, and appal the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze, indeed,
The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I,
A dull and muddy-mettled rascal peak,
Like John a-dreams,⁹ unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing ; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property, and most dear life,

new-created the performers of his age. Mysteries, moralities, and interludes, afforded no materials for art to work on, no discriminations of character, or varieties of appropriated language. From tragedies like Cambyes, Tamburlaine, and Jeronimo, nature was wholly banished ; and the comedies of Gammer Gurton, Comoe Con-dycyons, and The Old Wives' Tale, might have had justice done to them by the lowest order of human beings.

'Sanctus his animal, mentisque capacius altis, was wanting when the dramas of Shakspeare made their first appearance ; and to these we were certainly indebted for the excellent actors who could never have improved so long as their sensibilities were unawakened, their memories burthened only by pedantic or puritanical declamation, and their manners vulgarised by pleasantry of as low an origin.'—Steevens.

7 The folio reads warm'd, which reading Steevens contended for : he was probably moved by a spirit of opposition ; for surely no one can doubt, who considers the context, that wann'd is the poet's word. Indeed, I question whether his visage warm'd, for his face suffused, would have entered into the mind of a writer or the comprehension of a reader or auditor in Shak-speare's time.

8 I.e. the hint or prompt word, a technical phrase among players ; it is the word or sign given by the prompter for a player to enter on his part, to begin to speak or act. 'A prompter (says Florio,) one who keeps the booke for the plaiers, and teacheth them, or schollers their kue, i. e. their part ; and this will explain why it is used in other places, as in Othello, for part :—

'Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter.'

9 John a-dreams or John a-droynes, was a common term for any dreaming or droning simpleton. There is a story told of one John a-droynes, a Suffolk simpleton, who played the Devil in a stage play, in the Hundred Merry Tales. And there is another foolish character of that name in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra. Un-pregnant is not quickened or properly impressed with.

A damn'd defeat¹ was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie i' the throat,

As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
Ha!

Why, I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal: Bloody, bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless² villain!

Why, what an ass am I? This is most brave;
That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,³
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing like a very drab,
A scullion!

Fie upon't! foh! About my brains!⁴ Humph! I have heard,

That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,⁵
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine uncle; I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him⁶ to the quick; if he do blench,⁷
I know my course. The spirit, that I have seen,
May be a devil: and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
Out of my weakness, and my melancholy,
(As he is very potent with such spirits,)
Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds
More relative⁸ than this: The play's the thing,
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Room in the Castle. Enter King, Queen, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. And can you, by no drift of conference⁹
Get from him why he puts on this confusion;
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess, he feels himself distracted;
But from what cause he will by no means speak.

GUIL. Nor do we find him forward to be soundest;
But with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

1 Defeat here signifies destruction. It was frequently used in the sense of undo or take away by our old writers. Thus Chapman in his Revenge for Honour—

'That he might meantime make a sure defeat
On our good aged father's life.'

2 Kindless is unnatural.

3 The first folio reads thus:—

'Oh vengeance!'

Who? What an ass am I? I sure this is most brave,
That I the sonne of the Deere murdered.'

The quarto of 1604 omits 'Oh vengeance,' and reads, 'a deere murdered.' The quarto of 1602, 'that I the son of my dear father.'

4 It seems extraordinary that Mason and Steevens could ever conceive that there was any allusion here to the nautical phrase, about ship. 'About my brains' is nothing more than 'to work my brains.' The common phrase, to go about a thing, is not yet obsolete. Falstaff humours the equivocal use of the word in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—'No quips now, Pistol, indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift.' Steevens's quotation from Heywood's Iron Age should have taught him better:—

'My brain about again! for thou hast found
New projects now to work on.'

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

GUIL. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands,
Most free in his reply.¹⁰

Queen.

Did you assay him

To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-raught¹¹ on the way: of these we told him;
And there did seem in him a kind of joy
To hear of it: They are about the court;
And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol.

'Tis most true:

And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties,
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.

Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exit ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:

For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;

That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront¹² Ophelia:

Her father, and myself (lawful espials,¹³)
Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,
We may of their encounter frankly judge;
And gather by him, as he is behav'd,
If 't be the affliction of his love, or no,
That thus he suffers for.

Queen.

I shall obey you:

And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope, your virtues
Will bring him to his wonted way again,
To both your honours.

Oph.

Madam, I wish it may.

[Exit Queen.

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here:—Gracious, so please you,

We will bestow¹⁴ ourselves:—Read on this book;
[To OPHELIA.

That show of such an exercise may colour

Your loneliness.¹⁵—We are oft to blame in this,—

'Tis too much prov'd,—that with devotion's visage,

And pious action, we do sugar o'er

The devil himself.

King.

O, 'tis too true! how smart

A lash that speech doth give my conscience!

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plastering art,

Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,

Than is my deed to my most painted word:

O, heavy burden!

[Aside.

Pol. I hear him coming; let's withdraw, my lord.

[Exit King and POLONIUS.

5 A number of instances of the kind are collected by Thomas Heywood in his Apology for Actors.

6 To tent was to probe, to search a wound.

7 To blench is to shrink or start. Vide Winter's Tale, Act I. Sc. 2.

8 i. e. more near, more immediately connected. The first quarto reads, 'I will have sounder proofs.'

9 Folio—circumstance.

10 'Slow to begin conversation, but free enough in answering our demands.'

11 i. e. reached, overtook.

12 i. e. meet her, encounter her; affrontare, Ital. See Winter's Tale, Act v. Sc. 1.

13 'Lawful espials'; that is lawful spies. 'An espiall in warres, a scoutwatche, a beholder, a viewer.'—Baret. See King Henry VI. Part I. Act I. Sc. 4. An espy was also in use for a spy. The two words are only found in the folio.

14 'Bestow ourselves' is here used for hide or place ourselves. We have the word in the same sense in a subsequent scene:—

'Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,

We cannot get from him.'

We now use stow. One of our old dictionaries makes a discrimination between the acceptations of the word, thus:—'To bestow, or lay out; to bestow, or give; to bestow, or place.'

15 Quarto—lowliness.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:—
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind, to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune;
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And, by opposing, end them?—To die,—to sleep,—
No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end
The heart-ach, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep;—
To sleep! perchance to dream;—ay, there's the rub;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause: There's the respect,
That makes calamity of so long life:
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life;
But that the dread of something after death,—
The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns,—puzzles the will;
And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;¹⁰
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought;
And enterprises of great pith¹¹ and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry,¹²
And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now!
The fair Ophelia:—Nymph, in thy orisons¹³
Be all my sins remember'd.

Oph. Good my lord,
How does your honour for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thank you; well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you, now receive them.

Ham. No, not I;
I never gave you aught.

Oph. My honour'd lord, you know right well,
you did:

And, with them, words of so sweet breath compos'd
As made the things more rich: their perfume lost,
Take these again; for to the noble mind,
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.

1 'This mortal coil;' that is, 'the tumult and bustle of this life.' It is remarkable that under garbuglio, which has the same meaning in Italian as our coil, Florio has 'a pecke of troubles'; of which Shakespeare's 'sea of troubles' is only an aggrandized idea.

2 i. e. the consideration. This is Shakespeare's most usual sense of the word.

3 Time, for the time, is a very usual expression with our old writers. Thus in Ben Jonson's Every Man Out of his Humour:

'Oh, how I hate the monstrousness of time.'

4 Florio—'the poor man's contumely.'

5 The allusion is to the term quietus est, used in settling accounts at exchequer audits. Thus Webster in his Dutchess of Malfy:—

'You had the trick in audit time to be sick,
Till I had sign'd your quietus.'

And, more appositely, in Sir Thomas Overbury's character of a Franklin:—'Lastly to end him, he cares not when his end comes; he needs not feare his audit, for his quietus is in heaven.'

6 'Bodkin was the ancient term for a small dagger.'

7 Packs, burdens.

8 Though to grunt has been degraded in modern language, it appears to have conveyed no vulgar or low image to the ear of our ancestors, as many quotations from the old translations of the classics would show. 'Loke that the places about thee be so in silence that thy courage and mynde gronte nor groudge nat.' Paynel's Translation of Erasmus de Contempti Mundi. The fact seems to be, that to groan and to grunt were convertible terms. 'Swayne would for love groymeth.'—Horman's Vulgaria. And Chaucer in The Monk's Tale:—

'But never gront he at no stroke but on.'

Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest?

Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair?

Oph. What means your lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.¹⁴

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was some time a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Ham. You should not have believed me; for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it: I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a nunnery; Why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better, my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck, than I have thoughts to put them in;¹⁵ imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in; What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven! We are arrant knaves, all; believe none of us: Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father?

Oph. At home, my lord.

Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him; that he may play the fool no where¹⁶ but in his own house. Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry; Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny. Get thee to a nunnery; farewell!¹⁷ Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him!

Ham. I have heard of your paintings¹⁸ too, well enough; God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another: you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nickname God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance;¹⁹ Go to; I'll no more of it: it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages: those that are married already, all but one, shall live; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. [Exit HAMLET.]

9 Mr. Douce points out the following passages in Cranmer's Bible, which may have been in Shakespeare's mind:—'Afore I goe thither, from whence I shall not turne againe, even to the lande of darkness, and shadowe of death; yea into that darke cloudie lande and deadly shadow wherens no order, but terrible feare as in the darkness.'—Job, c. x. 'The way that I must goe is at hande, but whence I shall not turne againe.'—Is. c. xvi.

That scorne the world, and as a traveller
Goes to discover countries yet unknown.'

14 i. e. 'your honesty should not admit your beauty to any discourse with her.' The first quarto reads:—
'Your beauty should admit no discourse to your honesty.'
That of 1604:—'You should admit no discourse to your beauty.'

15 'Than I have thoughts to put them in.' To put 'a thing into thought' is 'to think on it.'

19 'You mistake by wanton affection, and pretend to mistake by ignorance.'

Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue,
sword:

The expectancy and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion and the mould of form,²⁰
The observ'd of all observers! quite, quite down!
And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune¹ and harsh;
That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy:² O, wo is me!
To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter King and POLONIUS.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend;
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch, and the disclose,³
Will be some danger: Which for to prevent,
I have, in quick determination,
Thus set it down; He shall with speed to England,
For the demand of our neglected tribute:
Haply, the seas, and countries distant,
With variable objects, shall expel
This something-settled matter in his heart;
Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well: But yet, I do believe,
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia?
You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My Lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his grief; let her be round⁴ with him;
And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference: If she find him not,
To England send him; or confine him, where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so:
Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the same. Enter HAMLET, and certain Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines.⁵ Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but use all gently; for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings:⁶ who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb shows, and noise: I would have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing 'Termagant';⁷ it out-herods Herod: 'Pray you, avoid it.

1 Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action: with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure.⁸ Now this, overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure of which one, must in your allowance,⁹ o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. O, there be players, that I have seen play,—and heard others praise, and that highly,—not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, Pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

1 Play. I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us.

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though, in the mean time, some necessary question¹⁰ of the play be then to be considered: that's villanous; and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.—[Exeunt Players.]

Enter POLONIUS, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

How now, my lord? will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste.—[Exit POLONIUS.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. Ay, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!

Enter HORATIO.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal.

standing gentlemen of the ground; and Shirley, 'grave underlanders.'

¹ No shows, no dance, and what you most delight in, Grave underlanders, here's no target-fighting.

² Sir W. Cornwallis calls the ignorant earthlings. 'I have not been ashamed to adventure mine ears with a ballad-singer,—the profit to see earthlings satisfied with such coarse stuffe,' &c.—Essay 15. ed. 1623.

³ Termagant is the name given in old romances to the tempestuous god of the Saracens. He is usually joined with Mahound or Mahomet. Hall mentions him in his first Satire:—

'Nor fright the reader with the Pagan vaunt
Of mighty Mahound and great Termagant.'

⁴ Pressure is impression, resemblance.

⁵ i. e. approval, estimation. Vide King Lear, Act ii. Sc. 4.

⁶ The quarto, 1603, 'Point in the play then to be observed.' Afterwards is added, 'And then you have some again that keeps one suit of jests, as a man is known by one suit of apparel; and gentlemen quotes his jests down in their tables before they come to the play, as thus:—Cannot you stay till I eat my porridge; and you owe me a quarter's wages; and your beer is sour, and blabbering with his lips: And thus keeping in his cinque a pace of jests; when, God knows, the warme Clown cannot make a jest unless by chance, as the blind man catcheth a hare: Masters, tell him of it.'—This passage was evidently levelled at the particular fool of some injudicious player contemporary with the poet

² Ecstasy is alienation of the mind. Vide Tempest, Act iii. Sc. 3.

³ To disclose was the ancient term for hutching birds of any kind; from the Fr. esclos, and that from the Lat. exclusus. I believe to exclude is now the technical term. Thus in the Boke of St. Albans, ed. 1496:—'For to speke of hawkes; fyrst they ben egges, and afterwarde they ben dysclosed hawkyes.' And 'comynly goshawkes ben disclosyd as soone as the choughs.'

⁴ See note on Act li. Sc. 2.

⁵ Have you never seen a stalking stamping player, that will raise a tempest with his tongue, and thunder with his heels.—The Puritan, a Comedy. The first quarto has, 'I'd rather hear a town-bull bellow, than such a fellow speak my lines.'

⁶ The first quarto reads, 'of the ignorant.' Our ancient theatres were far from the commodious elegant structures which later times have seen. The pit was, truly, what its name denotes, an unfloored space in the area of the house, sunk considerably beneath the level of the stage; and, by ancient representations, one may judge that it was necessary to elevate the head very much to get a view of the performance. Hence this part of the audience were called groundlings. Jonson, in the Induction to Bartholomew Fair, calls them 'the under-

Hor. O, my dear lord, —

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter :
For what advancement may I hope from thee,
That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits,
To feed, and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp ;
And crook the pregnant¹ hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?
Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
And could of men distinguish her election,
She hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been
As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;
A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks; and bless'd are those,
Whose blood and judgment² are so well co-mingled,³
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please: Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee. — Something too much of this. —
There is a play to-night before the king;
One scene of it comes near the circumstance,
Which I have told thee of my father's death.
I pray thee, when thou seest that act afoot,
Even with the very comment of thy soul
Observe my uncle: if his occulted guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen;
And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulcan's stithy.⁴ Give him heedful note:
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;⁵
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure⁶ of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord:
If he steal aught, the whilst this play is playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the theft.
Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be idle:
Get you a place.

Danish March. A Flourish. Enter King, Queen, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith; of the chameleon's dish:
I eat the air, promise-crammed; You cannot feed
capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet;
these words are not mine.

1 Pregnant, quick, ready.

2 According to the doctrine of the four humours, desire and confidence were seated in the blood, and judgment in the phlegm, and the due mixtures of the humours made a perfect character. — Johnson.

3 Quarto, 1604 — 'co-meddl'd.'

4 Vulcan's stithy is Vulcan's workshop or smithy; stith being an anvil.

5 Here the first quarto has: —

'And if he do not blench and change at that,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen;
Horatio, have a care, observe him well.

Hor. My lord, mine eyes shall still be on his face,
And not the smallest alteration

That shall appear in him, but I shall note it.'

6 i. e. judgment, opinion.

7 A Latin play on the subject of Cæsar's death was performed at Christ Church, in Oxford, in 1582. Malone thinks that there was an English play on the same subject, previous to Shakespeare's. Cæsar was killed in Pompey's portico, and not in the Capitol: but the error is at least as old as Chaucer's time.

8 This Julius to the Capitolie wente
Upon a day, that he was wont to gon,
And in the Capitolie anon him hente
This false Brutus and his other soon,
And sticket him with bodkins anon
With many a wound,¹ &c.

Chaucer's Monkes Tale, v. 14621.

I have cited this passage to show that Chaucer uses bodkin for dagger, like Shakespeare.

9 l. e. 'they wait upon your sufferance or will.' — Johnson would have changed the word to pleasure; but Shakespeare has again used it in a similar sense in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1: —

'Go,

And think my patience more than thy desert
Is privilege for thy departure hence.'

Ham. No, nor mine now. My lord, — you played once in the university, you say? [To POLONIUS.

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Cæsar: I was killed i'
the Capitol; Brutus killed me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so capital a calf there. — Be the players ready?

Ros. Ay, my lord; they stay⁹ upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.

Pol. O, ho! do you mark that? [To the King.

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

[Lying down at OPHELIA'S Feet.

Oph. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think, I meant contrary⁹ matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O! your only jig-maker.¹⁰ What should a man do, but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Oph. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables.¹¹ O, heavens!
die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'r-lady, he must build churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse;¹² whose epitaph is, *For,
O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot.*

Trumpets sound. The Dumb Show¹³ follows.

*Enter a King and a Queen, very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck:
lays him down upon a bank of flowers; she, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a Fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exits. The Queen returns: finds the King dead, and makes pas-*

9 This is the reading of the quarto 1603. The quarto 1604 and the folio read country.

10 It may here be added that a jig sometimes signified a sprightly dance, as at present. In addition to the examples before given, take the following from Ford's Love's Sacrifice: — 'O Giacompo! Petrarch was a dunce, Dante a jig-maker, Sannazar a goose, and Ariosto a puck-fist to me.' — Act ii. Sc. 2.

11 i. e. a dress ornamented with the rich fur of that name, said to be the skin of the sable martin. By the statute of apparel, 24 Hen. VIII. c. 13, it is ordained that none under the degree of an earl may use sables. — Bishop, in his Blossoms, 1577, speaking of extravagance, says, that a thousand ducates were sometimes given for a face of sables. But Hamlet meant to use the word equivocally.

12 The hobby-horse, whose omission in the morris dance is so pathetically lamented in many of our old dramas, in the very words which Hamlet calls his epitaph, was long a distinguished favourite in the May Games. He was driven from his station by the Puritans, as an impious and Pagan superstition; but restored after the promulgation of the Book of Sports. The hobby-horse was formed of a pasteboard horse's head, and probably a light frame made of wicker-work to form the hinder parts; this was fastened round the body of a man, and covered with a footcloth, which nearly reached the ground, and concealed the legs of the performer; who displayed his antic equestrian skill, and performed various juggling tricks, weigh-hie-ing or neighing, to the no small delight of the bystanders.

13 This dumb show appears to be superfluous, and even incongruous; for as the murder is there circumstantially represented, the King ought to have been struck with it then, without waiting for the dialogue.

sionate action. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The Poisoner woos the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling awhile; but, in the end, accepts his love. [Exeunt.]

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is miching malicho;¹ it means mischief.

Oph. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: Be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.²

Oph. You are naught, you are naught; I'll mark the play.

Pro. *For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency,
We beg your hearing patiently.*

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord,—

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a King and a Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phœbus' cart gone round

Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground;
And thirty dozen moons, with borrow'd sheen,
About the world have times twelve thirties been;
Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands,
Unite commutual in most sacred bands.

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon

Make us again count o'er, ere love be done!

But, wo is me, you are so sick of late,

So far from cheer, and from your former state,

That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust,

Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must:

For women fear too much, even as they love;³

And women's fear and love hold quantity;

In neither aught, or in extremity.

Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know;

And as my love is siz'd,⁴ my fear is so.

Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;

Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

P. King. 'Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;

My operant⁵ powers their functions leave to do;

And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,

Honour'd, belov'd; and, haply, one as kind

For husband shalt thou—

P. Queen. O, confound the rest!

1 Miching malicho is lurking mischief, or evil doing. To mich, for to skulk, to lurk, was an old English verb in common use in Shakspeare's time; and malicho or malhecho, misdeed, he has borrowed from the Spanish. Many stray words of Spanish and Italian were then affectedly used in common conversation, as we have seen French used in more recent times. The quarto spells the word mallico. Our ancestors were not particular in orthography, and often spelt according to the ear.

2 The conversation with Ophelia, as Steevens remarks, cannot fail to disgust every modern reader. It was, no doubt, such as was current in society in that age, which had not yet learnt to throw a veil of decency over corrupt manners. Yet still I think that such discourse would not have been put into the mouth of Hamlet by the poet, had he not meant it to mark the feigned madness of Hamlet the stronger from its inconsistency with his character as a prince and polished gentleman.

3 Cart, car, or chariot, were used indiscriminately for any carriage formerly. Mr. Todd has adduced the following passage from the Comical History of Alphonsus, by R. G. 1399, which, he thinks, Shakspeare meant to burlesque:—

'Thrice ten times Phœbus with his golden beames
Hath compassed the circle of the skie;
Thrice ten times Ceres hath her workmen hir'd,
And fill'd her barnes with fruitful crops of corne,
Since first in priesthood I did lead my life.

Such love must needs be treason in my breast;

In second husband let me be accus'd!

None wed the second, but who kill'd the first.

Ham. That's wormwood.

P. Queen. The instances,⁷ that second marriage move,

Are base respects of thrift, but none of love;

A second time I kill my husband dead,

When second husband kisses me in bed.

P. King. I do believe, you think what now you speak;

But, what we do determine oft we break.

Purpose is but the slave to memory;⁸

Of violent birth, but poor validity:

Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree;

But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.

Most necessary 'tis, that we forget

To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:

What to ourselves in passion we propose,

The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.

The violence of either grief or joy

Their own enactures⁹ with themselves destroy;

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;

Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.

This world is not for aye; nor 'tis not strange,

That even our loves should with our fortunes change;

For 'tis a question left us yet to prove,

Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.

The great man down, you mark his favourite flies;

The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies.

And hitherto doth love on fortune tend:

For who not needs, shall never lack a friend;

And who in want a hollow friend doth try,

Directly seasons¹⁰ him his enemy.

But, orderly to end where I begun,—

Our wills and fates, do so contrary run,

That our devices still are overthrown;

Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own:

So think thou wilt no second husband wed;

But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light!

Sport and repose lock from me, day, and night!

To desperation turn my trust and hope!

An anchor's¹¹ cheer in prison be my scope!

Each opposite, that blinks the face of joy,

Meet what I would have well, and it destroy!

Both here, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,

If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break it now,— 'To Oph.

P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while;

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile

The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.]

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain;

And never come mischance between us twain! [Exit.]

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?

Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

4 This line is omitted in the folio. There appears to have been a line omitted in the quarto which should have rhymed to this.

5 Cleopatra expresses herself much in the same manner for the loss of Antony:—

'—our size of sorrow

Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

As that which makes it.'

6 i. e. active.

7 Instances are motives. See note on King Richard III. Act iii. Sc. 2.

8 'But thought's the slave of life.'—King Henry IV. Part I.

9 i. e. their own determinations, what they enact.

10 See note on Act i. Sc. 3. 'This quaint phrase (says Steevens), infests almost every ancient English composition.' Why infests? Surely it is as forcible and intelligible as many other metaphorical expressions retained in the language. It has been remarked that our ancestors were much better judges of the powers of language than we are. The Latin writers did not scruple to apply their verb condire in the same manner.

11 Anchor's for anchoret's. Thus in Hall's second Satire, b. iv.:

'Sit seven years pining in an anchor's cheyre,
To win some patched shreds of minivere.'

Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest; no offence in't the world.

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The mouse-trap.¹ Marry, how? Tropically.² This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the duke's name,³ his wife, Baptista: you shall see anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work: But what of that? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.—

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king,

Oph. You are as good as a chorus,⁴ my lord.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you mistake⁵ your husbands.—Begin, murderer;—leave thy damnable fables, and begin. Come;—

—The croaking raven

Doth bellow for revenge.

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing;

Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds⁶ collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy natural magic and dire property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.

[Pours the Poison into the Sleeper's Ears.]

Ham. He poisons him in the garden for his estate. His name's Gonzago: the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: you shall see anon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Oph. The king rises.

Ham. What! frighted with false fire!

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light:—away!

Pol. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all but HAMLET and HORATIO.]

1 'The mouse-trap,' i. e.

2 '—the thing

In which he'll catch the conscience of the king.'

3 First quarto—tropically. It is evident that a pun was intended.

4 'Gonzago is the duke's name, his wife, Baptista;' all the old copies read thus. Yet in the dumb show we have, 'Enter a King and Queen;' and at the end of this speech, 'Lucianus, nephew to the King.' This seeming inconsistency, however, may be reconciled. Though the interlude is the image of the murder of the duke of Vienna, or in other words, founded upon that story, the poet might make the principal person in his fable a king. Baptista is never used singly by the Italians, being uniformly compounded with Giam and Giovanni. It is needless to remark that it is always the name of a man.

5 The use to which Shakespeare put the chorus may be seen in King Henry V. Every motion or puppet-show was accompanied by an interpreter or showman. Thus in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

'O excellent motion: O exceeding puppet!

Now will he interpret for her.'

6 The first quarto:—'So you must take your husband.' Hamlet puns upon the word mistake: 'So you mis-take or take your husbands amiss for better and worse.' The word was often thus misused for any thing done wrongfully, and even for privy stealing. In one of Baastard's Epigrams, 1598, cited by Steevens—

'—none that seeth her face and making,

Will judge her stol'n but by mistaking.'

7 'Midnight weeds.' Thus in Macbeth:—

'Root of hemlock, digg'd in't the dark.'

8 See note on As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 1.

9 To turn Turk, was a familiar phrase for any violent change in condition or character.

10 'Provincial roses, on my razed shoes.' Provincial was erroneously changed to Provencal, at the suggestion of Warton. Mr. Douce rectified the error by show-

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,⁷

The hart ungalled play:

For some must watch, while some must sleep;

Thus runs the world away.—

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers (if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk⁸ with me), with two provincial roses on my razed⁹ shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry¹⁰ of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share.¹¹

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O, Damon dear,

This realm dismantled was

Of Jove himself; and now reigns here

A very very—peacock.¹²

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O, good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning, —

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha!—come, some music; come, the recorders.¹³—

For if the king like not the comedy,

Why, then, belike,—he likes it not, perdy.¹⁴

Enter ROSENCRANZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Come, some music.

Guil. Good, my lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The king, sir, —

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Guil. Is, in his retirement, marvellous distempered.

Ham. With drink, sir?

Guil. No, my lord, with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to his purgation, would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler.

Guil. Good, my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir:—pronounce.

Guil. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me ing that the Provincial roses took their name from Provins, in Lower Brie, and not from Provence. Razed shoes are most probably embroidered shoes. The quarto reads, rac'd. To race, or rase, was to stripe.

10 'A cry of players.' It was usual to call a pack of hounds a cry; from the French meute de chiens: it is here humorously applied to a troop or company of players. It is used again in Coriolanus: Menenius says to the citizens, 'you have made good work, you and your cry.' In the very curious catalogue of The Companies of Bestys, given in The Booke of St. Albans, many equally singular terms may be found, which seem to have exercised the wit and ingenuity of our ancestors; as a thraue of throsers, a scull or sheal of monks, &c.

11 The players were paid not by salaries, but by shares or portions of the profit, according to merit. See Malone's Account of the Ancient Theatres, passim.

12 'A very, very—peacock.' The old copies read paiock, and paioche. The peacock was as proverbially used for a proud fool as the lapwing for a silly one. 'Pavonegiare, to court it, to brave it, to peacockise it, to wantonise it, to get up and down fondly, gazing upon himself as a peacock does.'—Florio, Ital. Dict. 1593. Theobald proposed to read padock; and in the last scene, Hamlet bestows this opprobrious name upon the king. Mr. Blakeway has suggested that we might read puttock, which means a base degenerate hawk, a kite; which Shakespeare does indeed contrast with the eagle in Cymbeline, Act i. Sc. 2:—

'I chose an eagle, and did avoid a puttock.'

13 'The recorders.' See note on a Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. Sc. 1. It is difficult to settle exactly the form of this instrument: old writers in general make no distinction between a flute, a pipe, and a recorder; but Hawkins has shown clearly, from a passage in Lord Bacon's Natural History, that the flute and the recorder were distinct instruments.

14 Perdy is a corruption of the French par Dieu.

a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment : if not, your pardon, and my return shall be the end of my business.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guil. What, my lord ?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer ; my wit's diseased : But, sir, such answer as I can make, you shall command ; or, rather, as you say, my mother : therefore no more, but to the matter ; My mother, you say, —

Ros. Then thus she says : Your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O, wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother ! — But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration ? impart.

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us ?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. And do still, by these pickers and stealers.

Ros. Good, my lord, what is your cause of distemper ? you do, surely, but bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark ?

Ham. Ay, sir, but While the grass grows, — the proverb is something musty.

Enter the Players, with Recorders.

O, the Recorders : — let me see one. — To withdraw with you.¹ — Why do you go about to recover the wind of me,² as if you would drive me into a toil ?

Guil. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.³

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe ?

Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying : govern these ventages⁴ with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music. Look you, these are the stops.

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony ; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me ? You would play upon me ; you would seem to know my stops ; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery ; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass : and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think, I am easier to be played on than a pipe ? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

1 'To withdraw with you.' Malone added here a stage direction [Taking Guild, aside.] Steevens thinks it an answer to a motion Guildenstern had used, for Hamlet to withdraw with him. I think that it means no more than 'to draw back with you,' to leave that scent or trail. It is a hunting term, like that which follows.

2 'To recover the wind of me.' This is a term which has been left unexplained. It is borrowed from hunting, as the context shows ; and means, to take advantage of the animal pursued, by getting to the windward of it, that it may not scent its pursuers. 'Observe how the wind is, that you may set the net so as the hare and wind may come together ; if the wind be sideways it may do well enough, but never if it blow over the net into the hare's face, for he will scent both it and you at a distance.' — Gentleman's Recreation.

3 Hamlet may say with propriety, 'I do not well understand that.' Perhaps Guildenstern means, 'If my duty to the king makes me too bold, my love to you makes me importunate even to rudeness.'

4 The ventages are the holes of the pipe. The stops means the mode of stopping those ventages to produce

Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, sir !

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel ?

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks, it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale.

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by. — They fool me to the top of my bent.⁵ — I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so. [Exit POLONIUS.]

Ham. By and by is easily said. — Leave me, friends. [Exit Ros. GUIL. HOR. &c.]

'Tis now the very witching time of night ; When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out Contagion to this world : Now could I drink hot blood,

And do such bitter business as the day⁶

Would quake to look on. Soft ; now to my mother, —

O, heart, lose not thy nature ; let not ever

The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom ;

Let me be cruel, not unnatural :

I will speak daggers to her,⁷ but use none ;

My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites :

How in my wordssoever she be shent,⁸

To give them seals, never, my soul, consent ! [Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in the same. Enter King, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. I like him not : nor stands it safe with us, To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare you ; I your commission will forthwith despatch, And he to England shall along with you : The terms of our estate may not endure Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow Out of his lunacies.

Guil. We will ourselves provide : Most holy and religious fear it is, To keep those many many bodies safe, That live, and feed, upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound, With all the strength and armour of the mind, To keep itself from 'noyance ; but much more That spirit, upon whose weal⁹ depend and rest The lives of many. The cease of majesty Dies not alone : but, like a gulf, doth draw What's near it, with it : it is a massy wheel, Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount, To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things Are mortis'd and adjoin'd ; which, when it falls, Each small annexment, petty consequence, Attends the boist'rous ruin. Never alone Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage ;

For we will fetters put upon¹⁰ this fear, Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. Guil. We will haste us.

[Exit ROSENCRANTZ and GUIL.]

notes. Malone has made it the 'sounds produced,' Thus in King Henry V. Prologue : —

'Rumour is a pipe —

And of so easy and so plain a stop.'

5 See notes on Act ii. Sc. 2.

6 The quarto reads : —

'And do such business as the bitter day,' &c.

7 'They are pestilent fellows, they speak nothing but bodkins.' — Return from Parnassus. In the Aulularia of Plautus a phrase not less singular occurs : —

'Me' Quia miri miseri cerebrum excutunt.

Tua dicta sorori : lapides loquuntur.' Act ii. Sc. 1.

8 To shend is to injure, whether by reproof, blows, or otherwise. Shakspeare generally uses shent for reproof, threatened with angry words. 'To give his words seals' is therefore to carry his punishment beyond reproof. The allusion is to the sealing a deed to render it effective. The quarto of 1603 : —

'I will speak daggers ; those sharp words being spent, To do her wrong my soul shall ne'er consent.'

9 Folio reads 'spirits.'

10 Quarto — 'about.'

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet.
Behind the arras! I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax him
home;

And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet, that some more audience, than a mother,
Since nature makes them partial,² should o'erhear
The speech, of vantage.³ Fare you well, my liege;
I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord.
[Exit POLONIUS.]

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon't,
A brother's murder!—Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;⁴
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer, but this two-fold force,—
To be forestalled, ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!—
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: But 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature: and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
O, wretched state! O, bosom, black as death!
O, limed⁵ soul; that, struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Help, angels, make assay!
Bow, stubborn knees! and, heart, with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe;
All may be well!

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do't; and so he goes to heaven:
And so am I reveng'd? That would be scann'd:⁶
A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.
Why, this is hire and salary,⁷ not revenge.
He took my father grossly full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May;
And, how his audit stands, who knows, save heaven?

1 See King Henry IV. Part I. Act ii. Sc. 4.

2 Matres omnes filios

In peccato adjuvantes, auxilium in paterna injuria
Solent esse.—Mer. Heaut. Act v. Sc. 2.

3 Warburton explains of vantage, 'by some opportunity of secret observation.' I incline to think that 'of vantage,' in Shakespeare's language, is for advantage, commodi causa.

4 i. e. 'though I was not only willing, but strongly inclined to pray, my guilt prevented me.'

5 i. e. caught as with birdlime.

6 'That would be scann'd'—that requires consideration, or ought to be estimated.

7 The quarto reads, base and silly.

8 Shakespeare has used the verb to hent, to take, to lay hold on, elsewhere; but the word is here used as a substantive, for hold or opportunity.

9 Johnson has justly exclaimed against the horrible nature of this desperate revenge; but the quotations of the commentators from other plays contemporary with and succeeding this, show that it could not have been so

But, in our circumstance and course of thought
'Tis heavy with him: And am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No.

Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid hent:
When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage;
Or, in the incestuous pleasures of his bed;
At gaming, swearing; or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in't:
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven:
And that his soul may be as damn'd, and black,
As hell, whereto it goes.⁹ My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days. [Exit.]

The King rises and advances.

King. My words fly up, my thoughts remain below:
Words, without thoughts, never to heaven go.¹⁰
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Another Room in the same. Enter Queen and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look, you lay home to him:

Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear
with;

And that your grace hath screen'd and stood between

Much heat and him. I'll silence me e'en here.

'Pray you, be round with him.¹¹

Queen. I'll warrant you;
Fear me not:—withdraw, I hear him coming.
[POLONIUS hides himself.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother; what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet?

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so:

You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife;
And,—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall not budge;

You go not, till I set you up a glass
Where you may see the inmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me?

Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind.] What, ho! help!
Ham. How now! a rat?

[Draws.]

Dead, for a ducat, dead.

[HAMLET makes a pass through the Arras.]

Pol. [Behind.] O, I am slain.
[Falls, and dies.]

horrifying to the ears of our ancestors. In times of less civilization, revenge was held almost a sacred duty; and the purpose of the appearance of the ghost in this play is chiefly to excite Hamlet to it. The more fell and terrible the retributive act, the more meritorious it seems to have been held. The King himself in a future scene, when stimulating Laertes to kill Hamlet, says, 'Revenge should have no bounds.' Macon has observed that, horrid as this resolution of Hamlet's is, 'yet some moral may be extracted from it, as all his subsequent misfortunes were owing to this savage refinement of revenge.'

10 First quarto:—

'No king on earth is safe, if God's his foe.'

11 The folio here interposes the following speech:—

'Ham. [Within] Mother, mother, mother.'

The circumstance of Polonius hiding himself behind the arras and the manner of his death are found in the old black letter prose History of Hamblet.

Queen. O, me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not:
Is it the king?

[Lifts up the Arras, and draws forth POLO-NIUS.

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed; almost as bad, good mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.¹

Queen. As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word.—
Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

[To POLONIUS.

I took thee for thy better; take thy fortune:

Thou find'st to be too busy, is some danger.—

Leave wringing of your hands; Peace; sit you down.

And let me wring your heart: for so I shall,

If it be made of penetrable stuff;

If damned custom have not braz'd it so,

That it be proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act,

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;

Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love,

And sets a blister there;² makes marriage vows

As false as dicers' oaths: O, such a deed

As from the body of contraction plucks

The very soul; and sweet religion makes

A rhapsody of words: Heaven's face doth glow;

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,

With tristful visage, as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.³

Queen. Ah me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?⁴

Ham. Look here upon this picture, and on this;

The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow:

Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;

An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;

A station⁵ like the herald Mercury,

New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;

¹ There is an idle and verbose controversy between Steevens and Malone, whether the poet meant to represent the Queen as guilty or innocent of being accessory to the murder of her husband. Surely there can be no doubt upon the matter. The Queen shows no emotion at the mock play when it is said—

'In second husband let me be accurst,

None wed the second but who kill'd the first.'—and now manifests the surprise of conscious innocence upon the subject. It should also be observed that Hamlet never directly accuses her of any guilty participation in that crime. I am happy to find my opinion, so expressed in December, 1823, confirmed by the newly discovered quarto copy of 1603; in which the Queen in a future speech is made to say—

'But, as I have a soul, I swear by heaven,
I never knew of this most horrid murder.'

² ———— takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love,' &c. One would think by the ludicrous gravity with which Steevens and Malone take this figurative expression in a literal sense, that they were unused to the language of poetry, especially to the adventurous metaphors of Shakspeare. Mr. Boswell's note is short and to the purpose. 'Rose is put generally for the ornament, the grace of an innocent love.' Ophelia describes Hamlet as—

'The expectancy and rose of the fair state.'

³ The quarto of 1604 gives this passage thus:—

'Heaven's face does glow

O'er this solidity and compound mass

With heated visage, as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.'

⁴ The index, or table of contents, was formerly placed at the beginning of books. In Othello, Act ii. Sc. 7, we have—'an index and obscure prologue to the history of foul and lustful thoughts.'

⁵ It is evident from this passage that whole length pictures of the two kings were formerly introduced. Station does not mean the spot where any one is placed, but the act of standing, the attitude. So in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 3:—

'Her motion and her station are as one.'

A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man:
This was your husband.—Look you now, what follows:

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother.⁶ Have you eyes?
Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten⁷ on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it, love: for, at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment
Would step from this to this? [Sense,⁸ sure you have,

Else could you not have motion: But, sure, that sense

Is apoplex'd: for madness would not err;

Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd,

But it reserv'd some quantity of choice,

To serve in such a difference.] What devil was't

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind?

[Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,

Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,

Or but a sickly part of one true sense

Could not so mope.¹⁰

O, shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,

If thou canst mutine¹¹ in a matron's bones,

To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,

And melt in her own fire:¹² proclaim no shame,

When the compulsive ardour gives the charge;

Since frost itself as actively doth burn,

And reason panders will.

Queen. O, Hamlet, speak no more:

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;

And there I see such black and grain'd¹³ spots

As will not leave their tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an enseam'd¹⁴ bed;

Stew'd in corruption; honeying, and making love

Over the nasty sty; —

Queen. O, speak to me no more;

These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears:

No more, sweet Hamlet.

Without this explanation it might be conceived that the compliment designed for the attitude of the King was bestowed on the place where Mercury is represented as standing.

⁶ Here the allusion is to Pharaoh's dream. Genesis, xli.

⁷ I. e. to feed rankly or grossly: it is usually applied to the fattening of animals. Marlowe has it for 'to grow fat.' Bat is the old word for increase; whence we have battle, batten, butful.

⁸ Sense here is not used for reason; but for sensation, feeling, or perception: as before in this scene:—
'That it be proof and bulwark against sense.'

Warburton, misunderstanding the passage, proposed to read notion instead of motion. The whole passage in brackets is omitted in the folio.

⁹ 'The hoodwinke play, or hoodman blind, in some place, called blindmanbuff.'—Barlet. It appears also to have been called blind hob. It is hob-man blind in the quarto of 1603.

¹⁰ I. e. could not be so dull and stupid.

¹¹ Mutine for mutiny. This is the old form of the verb. Shakspeare calls mutineers mutines in a subsequent scene; but this is, I believe, peculiar to him: they were called mutineers anciently.

¹² Thus in the quarto of 1603:—

'Why, appetite with you is in the wane,
Your blood runs backward now from whence it came;
Who'll chide hot blood within a virgin's heart,

When shall dwell within a matron's breast?

¹³ 'Grain'd spots'; that is, dyed in grain, deeply imbed.

¹⁴ I. e. greasy, rank, gross. It is a term borrowed from falconry. It is well known that the seam of any animal was the fat or tallow; and a hawk was said to be enseamed when she was too fat or gross for flight. By some confusion of terms, however, 'to enseam a hawk' was used for 'to purge her of glut and grease;' by analogy it should have been unseam. Beaumont and Fletcher, in The False One, use inseamed in the same manner:—

'His lechery inseamed upon him.'

It should be remarked, that the quarto of 1603 reads in-custuous; as does that of 1611

Ham. A murderer, and a villain;
A slave, that is not twentieth part the tithe
Of your precedent lord:—a vice¹ of kings:
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule;
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more.

*Enter Ghost.*²

Ham. A king
Of shreds and patches:—
Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards!—What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas, he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That, laps'd in time and passion,³ lets go by
The important acting of your dread command?
O, say!

Ghost. Do not forget: This visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look! amazement on thy mother sits:
O, step between her and her fighting soul;
Conceit⁴ in weakest bodies strongest works;
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how is't with you?
That you do bend your eyes on vacancy,
And with the incorporeal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,⁵
Starts up, and stands on end. O, gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Ham. On him! on him!—Look you how pale he glares!

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable.⁶—Do not look upon me;
Lest, with this piteous action, you convert
My stern affects:⁷ then what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears, perchance, for blood.

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all, that is, I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

1 i.e. 'the low mimic, the counterfeit, a dizard, or common vice and jester, counterfeiting the gestures of any man.'—Fleming. Shakspeare afterwards calls him a king of shreds and patches, alluding to the party-coloured habit of the vice or fool in a play.

2 The first quarto adds, 'in his night-gown.'

3 'Laps'd in time and passion.' Johnson explains this—'That having suffered time to slip and passion to cool, let's go by,' &c. This explanation is confirmed by the quarto of 1603:

'Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That I thus long have let revenge slip by.'

4 Conceit, for conception, imagination. This was the force of the word among our ancestors. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece:

'And the conceited painter was so nice.'

5 'The hair is excrementitious; that is, without life or sensation; yet those very hairs, as if they had life, start up,' &c. So Macbeth—

'—my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't.'

6 Capable for susceptible, intelligent, i.e. would excite in them capacity to understand. Thus in King Richard III.—

'—O 'tis a parlous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable.'

7 'My stern affects.' All former editions read—'My stern effects.' Effects, for actions, deeds, effected, says Malone. We should certainly read effects, i.e. dispositions, affections of the mind: as in that disputed passage of Othello—'the young affects in me defunct.' It is remarkable that we have the same error in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 1.—

'—Thou art not certain,
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon.'

Dr. Johnson saw the error in that play, and proposed to read effects. But the present passage has escaped observation. The 'pious action' of the ghost could not

Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there. look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!

Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!
[Exit Ghost.]

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy⁸
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: It is not madness,
That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks;
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place;
Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what's past; avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost⁹ on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue:
For in the fatness of these pury times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg;
Yea, curb¹⁰ and woo, for leave to do him good.

Queen. O, Hamlet! thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worse part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night: but go not to my uncle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
[That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this:]¹¹
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery,
That aptly is put on:] Refrain to-night;¹²
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: [the next more easy:
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either quell the devil or throw him out
With wondrous potency.] Once more, good night!
And when you are desirous to be bless'd,
I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord, [Pointing to Polonius.]

alter things already effected, but might move Hamlet to a less stern mood of mind.

8 This speech of the queen has the following remarkable variation in the quarto of 1603:—

'Alas, it is the weakness of thy brain
Which makes thy tongue to blazon thy heart's grief:
But as I have a soul, I swear to heaven,
I never knew of this most horrid murder:
But, Hamlet, this is only fantasy,
And for my love forget these idle fits.'

9 'Do not by any new indulgence heighten your former offences.'

10 i.e. bow. 'Courber, Fr. to bow, crook, or curb.' Thus in Pierce Plowman:—

'Then I courbid on my knees.'

11 'That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this,' &c.
This passage, which is not in the folio, has been thought corrupt. Dr. Thirly proposed to read, 'Of habit's evil.' Steevens would read, 'O habit's devil.' It is evident that there is an intended opposition between angel and devil; but the passage will perhaps bear explaining as it stands:—'That monster custom, who devours all sense (feeling, or perception) of devilish habits, is angel yet in this,' &c. This passage might perhaps have been as well omitted, after the example of the editors of the folio; but, I presume, it has been retained upon the principle which every where guide the editors, 'To lose no drop of that immortal man.'

12 Here the quarto of 1603 has two remarkable lines:—
'And, mother, but assist me in revenge,
And in his death your infancy shall die.'

13 'The next more easy,' &c. This passage, as far as potency, is also omitted in the folio. In the line:—

'And either quell the devil, or throw him out.'

The word quell is wanting in the old copy. Malone inserted the word curb, because he found, in The Merchant of Venice, 'And curb this cruel devil of his will.' But the occurrence of curb in so opposite a sense just before, is against his emendation.

I do repent: But heaven hath pleas'd it so,—
To punish me with this, and this with me;¹
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So, again, good night!—
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.—
But one word more, good lady.

Queen. What shall I do?

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:
Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you, his mouse;²
And let him, for a pair of reechy³ kisses,
Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft.⁴ 'Twere good, you let him know;
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gib,⁵
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so?
No, in despite of sense, and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly; and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions,⁶ in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assur'd if words be made of breath,
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.⁷

Ham. I must to England;⁸ you know that?

Queen. Alack,
I had forgot; 'tis so concluded on.

Ham. [There's letters seal'd: and my two school-fellows,⁹—

Whom I will trust, as I will adders fang'd,—
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
And marshal me to knavery: Let it work;
For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar:¹⁰ and it shall go hard,
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon: O, 'tis most sweet,
When in one line two crafts directly meet.—
[This man shall set me packing.
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room:¹¹
Mother, good night.—Indeed, this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you:—
Good night, mother.

[Exeunt severally; HAMLET dragging in
POLONIUS.

1 'To punish me by making me the instrument of this man's death, and to punish this man by my hand.'

2 Mouse, a term of endearment formerly. Thus Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy:—'Pleasant names may be invented, bird, mouse, lamb, puss, pigeon,' &c.

3 i. e. reechy or fumant; teekant, as Florio calls it. The King has been already called the bloat king, which hints at his intemperance. In Coriolanus we have the reechy neck of a kitchen wench. Reechy and reechy are the same word, and always applied to any vaporous exhalation, even to the fumes of a dunghill.

4 The hint for Hamlet's feigned madness is taken from the old Historie of Hamblett already mentioned.

5 For paddock, a mead, see Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 1: and for gib, a cat, see King Henry IV. Part I. Act i. Sc. 2.

6 To try conclusions is to put to proof, or try experiments. See Merchant of Venice, Act ii. Sc. 2. Sir John Suckling possibly alludes to the same story in one of his letters:—'It is the story after all of the jackanapes and the partridges; thou starrest after a beauty till it be lost to thee, and then let'st out another, and starrest after that till it is gone too.'

7 The quarto of 1603 has here another remarkable variation:—

'Hamlet, I vow by that Majesty
That knows our thoughts and looks into our hearts,
I will conceal, consent, and do my best,
What stratagem so'er thou shalt devise.'

8 The manner in which Hamlet came to know that he was to be sent to England is not developed. He expresses surprise when the king mentions it in a future scene; but his design of passing for a madman may account for this.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Enter King, Queen, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heavens:

You must translate: 'tis fit we understand them:
Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.¹²—
[To ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN, who go out.

Ah,¹³ my good lord, what have I seen to-night!

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea, and wind, when both contend!¹⁴

Which is the mightier: In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries, A rat! a rat!
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O, heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there:

His liberty is full of threats to all;

To you yourself, to us, to every one.

Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?

It will be laid to us, whose providence

Should have kept, short restrain'd, and out of haunt,¹⁵

This mad young man: but, so much was our love,

We would not understand what was most fit;

But, like the owner of a foul disease,

To keep it from divulging, let it feed

Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:

O'er whom his very madness, like some ore,

Among a mineral¹⁶ of metals base,

Shows itself pure; he weeps for what is done.

King. O, Gertrude, come away!

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,

But we will ship him hence; and this vile deed

We must, with all our majesty and skill,

Both countenance and excuse.—Ho! Guildenstern!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:

Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,

9 This and the eight following verses are omitted in the folio.

10 Hoist with his own petar. Hoist for hoised. To hoise was the old verb. A petar was a kind of mortar used to blow up gates.

11 It must be confessed that this is coarse language for a prince under any circumstances, and such as is not called for by the occasion. But Hamlet has purposely chosen gross expressions and coarse metaphors, throughout the interview with his mother, perhaps to make his appeal to her feelings the more forcible. Something may be said in extenuation. The word guts was not anciently so offensive to delicacy as it is at present; the courtly Lyly has used it in his Mydas, 1592; Stanyhurst often in his translation of Virgil, and Chapman in his version of the sixth Iliad:—

'— in whose guts the king of men imprest

His ashen lance.'

In short, guts was used where we now use entrails.

12 This line does not appear in the folio, in which Guildenstern and Rosencrantz are not brought on the stage at all.

13 Quarto—Ah, mine own lord.

14 Thus in Lear:—

'— he was met e'en now,
As mad as the vex'd sea.'

15 Out of haunt means out of company. 'Frequentia, a great haunt or company of folk.' Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'Dido and her Sichæus shall want troops,

And all the haunt be ours.'

And in Romeo and Juliet:

'We talk here in the public haunt of men.'

16 Shakespeare, with a licence not unusual among his contemporaries, uses ore for gold, and mineral for mine. Bullokar and Blount both define 'or or ore, gold; of a golden colour.' And the Cambridge Dictionary, 1594, under the Latin word mineralia, will show how the English mineral came to be used for a mine. Thus also in The Golden Remaines of Hales of Eton, 1698:—'Controversies of the times, like spirits in the minerals, with all their labour nothing is done.'

And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd him :
Go, seek him out ; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends ;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done : [so, haply, slander,—
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,¹
Transports his poison'd shot, may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air.²—O, come away !
My soul is full of discord, and dismay. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Another Room in the same. Enter

HAMLET.

Ham. ——— Safely stowed,—[Ros. &c. within.
Hamlet ! Lord Hamlet !] But soft !³—what noise ?
who calls on Hamlet ? O, here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body ?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.

Ros. Tell us where 'tis ; that we may take it thence,

And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what ?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge !
—what replication should be made by the son of a
king ?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord ?

Ham. Ay, sir ; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities.⁴ But such officers do the king best services in the end : He keeps them, like an ape doth nuts,⁵ in the corner of his jaw ; first mouthed to be last swallowed : When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again.⁶

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it : A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body.⁷ The king is a thing—

GUIL. A thing, my lord ?

Ham. Of nothing : bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after.⁸ [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another Room in the same. Enter

King, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How dangerous is it, that this man goes loose !
Yet must not we put the strong law on him :
He's lov'd of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes ;
And, where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd,
But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even,

1 The blank was the mark at which shots or arrows were directed. Thus in The Winter's Tale, Act II.
Sc. 3 :—

' Out of the blank and level of my aim.'

2 The passage in brackets is not in the folio. The words 'So, haply, slander,' are also omitted in the quartos ; they were supplied by Theobald. The addition is supported by a passage in Cymbeline :—

' ——— No, 'tis slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Out-venoms all the worms of Nile, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth bely
All corners of the world.'

3 'But soft,' these two words are not in the folio.

4 Here the quarto, 1603, inserts 'that makes his liberty your storehouse, but,' &c.

5 The omission of the words 'doth nuts,' in the old copies, had obscured this passage. Dr. Farmer proposed to read 'like an ape an apple.' The words are now supplied from the newly discovered quarto of 1603.

6 'He's but a sponge, and shortly needs must leese,
His wrong got juice, when greatness' fist shall squeeze

His liquor out.

Marston, Sat. vii.

7 Hamlet affects obscurity. His meaning may be
The king is a body without a kingly soul, a thing—of

This sudden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause : Diseases, desperate grown,
By desperate appliance are relieved,

Enter ROSENCRANTZ.

Or not at all.—How now ? what hath befallen ?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,
We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he ?

Ros. Without, my lord ; guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern ! bring in my lord.

Enter HAMLET and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius ?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper ? Where ?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten :
a certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet : we fat all creatures else, to fat us ; and we fat ourselves for magots ; Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service ; two dishes, but to one table ;
that's the end.

[King. Alas, alas !

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king ; and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.]

King. What dost thou mean by this ?

Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may go a progress¹⁰ through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius ?

Ham. In heaven ; send thither to see : if your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there. [To some Attendants.]

Ham. He will stay till you come.

[Exeunt Attendants.
King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,—

Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve
For that which thou hast done,—must send thee
hence

With fiery quickness : Therefore prepare thyself ;
The bark is ready, and the wind at help,¹¹
The associates tend,¹² and every thing is bent
For England.

Ham. For England ?

King.

King.

Ham.

Ay, Hamlet.

Good.

King. So is it, if thou know'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub, that sees them.—But, come ; for England !—Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My mother ; Father and mother is man and wife ; man and wife is one flesh ; and so, my mother. Come, for England. [Exit.] nothing.' Johnson would have altered 'Of nothing' to Or nothing ; but Steevens and Farmer, by their superior acquaintance with our elder writers, soon clearly showed,

by several examples, that the text was right.

8 'Hide fox, and all after.' This was a juvenile sport, most probably what is now called hoop, or hide and seek ; in which one child hides himself, and the rest run all after, seeking him. The words are not in the quarto.

9 'Alas, Alas !' This speech and the following one of Hamlet, are omitted in the folio.

10 A progress is a journey. Steevens says 'it alludes to the royal journeys of state, always styled progresses.'
This was probably in Shakespeare's mind, for the word was certainly applied to those periodical journeys of the sovereign to visit their noble subjects, but by no means exclusively. Sir William Drury, in a Letter to Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, among the Conway papers, tells him he is going 'a little progress to be merry with his neighbours.' And that popular book of John Bunyan's, The Pilgrim's Progress, is surely not the account of a regal 'predatory excursion.'

11 i. e. in modern phrase 'the wind serves,' or is right to aid or help you on your way.

12 i. e. attend.

King. Follow him at foot ; tempt him with speed aboard ;

Delay it not, I'll have him hence to-night ;
Away ; for every thing is seal'd and done
That else leans on the affair : Pray you, make haste.

[Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]

And, England, if my love thou hold'st at aught,
(As my great power thereof may give thee sense ;
Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free awe Pays homage to us,) thou may'st not coldly set
Our sovereign process ; which imports at full,
By letters conjuring to that effect,
The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England ;
For like the hectic in my blood he rages,²
And thou must cure me : Till I know 'tis done,
Howe'er my haps, my joys will ne'er begin.³

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Plain in Denmark. Enter FORTINBRAS, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king ;

Tell him, that, by his licence, Fortinbras
Claims the conveyance of a promis'd march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.
If that his majesty would aught with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye.³
And let him know so.

Cap. I will do't, my lord.

For. Go softly on.

[Exeunt FORTINBRAS and Forces.]

Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, &c.

[Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these ?
Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purpos'd, sir,
I pray you ?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who
Commands them, sir ?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir,
Or for some frontier ?

Cap. Truly to speak, sir, and with no addition,
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name.

To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it ;

Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole,

A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd.

Ham. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousand ducats,

Will not debate the question of this straw :

This is the imposthume of much wealth and peace ;

1 To set formerly meant to estimate. There is no ellipsis, as Malone supposed. 'To *set*te, or tell the price; astimare.' To set much or little by a thing, is to estimate it much or little.

2 'I would forget her, but a fever she Reigns in my blood.' Love's Labour's Lost.

3 The folio reads :—

'Howe'er my haps, my joys were ne'er begun.'

4 The quarto reads—craves.

5 Eye for presence. In the Regulations for the establishment of the Queen's Household, 1627 :—'All such as doe service in the queen's eye.' And in the Establishment of Prince Henry's Household, 1610 :—'All such as doe service in the prince's eye.' It was the formula for the royal presence.

6 The remainder of this scene is omitted in the folio.

7 l. e. profit.

8 See note on Act i. Sc. 2. It is evident that discursive powers of mind are meant ; or, as Johnson explains it, 'such latitude of comprehension, such power of reviewing the past, and anticipating the future.' Since I wrote the former note, I find that Bishop Wilkins makes ratiocination and discourse convertible terms.

9 Craven is recreant, cowardly. It may be satisfactorily traced from crant, creant, the old French word for an act of submission. It is so written in the old metrical romance of Ywaine and Gawaine (Ritson, vol. i. p. 133) :—

That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
Why the man dies.—I humbly thank you, sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, sir. [Exit Captain.]

Ros. Will't please you go, my lord ?

Ham. I will be with you straight. Go a little before. [Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]

How all occasions do inform against me,
And spur my dull revenge ! What is a man,
If his chief good, and market⁷ of his time,
Be but to sleep and feed ? a beast, no more.
Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse,⁸ Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fust in us unus'd. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven⁹ scruple
Of thinking too precisely on the event,—
A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And, ever, three parts coward,—I do not know
Why yet I live to say, This thing's to do :
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means,
To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me :
Witness, this army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince ;
Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event ;
Exposing what is mortal, and unsure,
To all that fortune, death, and danger, dare,
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
Is, not to stir without great argument ;
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw :
When honour's at the stake. How stand I, then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason, and my blood,¹⁰
And let all sleep ? while, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That, for a fantasy, and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds : fight for a plot !¹¹
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough, and continent,¹²
To hide the slain ?—O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth !

[Exit.]

SCENE V. Elsinore. A Room in the Castle.
Enter Queen and HORATIO.

Queen. —I will not speak with her.

Hor. She is importunate ; indeed, distract ;
Her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen. What would she have ?

Hor. She speaks much of her father ; says, she hears,

There's tricks i' the world ; and hems, and beats her
heart ;

Spurns enviously¹³ at straws ; speaks things in doubt,

That carry but half sense : her speech is nothing,

'Or yelde the til us als creant.'

And in Richard Cœur de Lion (Weber, vol. ii. p. 203) :—

'On knees he fel down, and cryde, "Creant,"'

It then became cravant, cravent, and at length craven.
It is superfluous to add that recreant is from the same source.

10 'Excitements of my reason and my blood.'
Provocations which excite both my reason and my passions to vengeance.

11 A plot of ground. Thus in The Mirror for Magistrates :—

'Of ground to win a plot, a while to dwell,
We venture lives, and send our souls to hell.'

12 Continent means that which comprehends or encloses. Thus in Lear :—

'Rive your concealing continents.'

And in Chapman's version of the third Iliad :—

'— did take

Thy fair form for a continent of parts as fair.'

'If there be no fulnesse, then is the continent greater than the content.'—Bacon's Advancement of Learning, 1633, p. 7.

13 Envy is often used by Shakspeare and his contemporaries for malice, spite, or hatred :—

'You turn the good we offer into envy.'

King Henry VIII.

See Merchant of Venice, Act iv. Sc. 1. Indeed 'enviously, and spitefully,' are treated as synonymous by our old writers.

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection;¹ they aim² at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts;
Which, as her winks and nods, and gestures yield them,
Indeed, would make one think, there might³ be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.⁴
Queen. 'Twere good, she were spoken with; for she may strew
Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds:
Let her come in.⁵ [Exit HORATIO.]
To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss:⁶
So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
It spills itself in fearing to be spilt.

*Re-enter HORATIO, with OPHELIA.*⁷

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?

Queen. How now, Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true love know,
From another one?

*By his cockle hat and staff,
And his sandal shoon.*⁸ [Singing.]

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

Oph. Say you? nay; 'pray you, mark.

He is dead and gone, lady. [Sings.]

He is dead and gone;

At his head a grass-green turf

At his heels a stone.

O, ho!

Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,—

Oph. 'Pray you, mark.

White his shroud as the mountain snow. [Sings.]

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded⁹ all with sweet flowers;
*Which bewept to the grave¹⁰ did go,
With true love showers.*

King. How do you, pretty lady?

Oph. Well, God'ield¹¹ you! They say, the owl was a baker's daughter!¹² Lord, we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conceit upon her father.

Oph. 'Pray, let us have no words of this; but when they ask you, what it means, say you this:

Good morrow, 'tis Saint Valentine's day,¹³

All in the morning betime,

And I a maid at your window,

To be your Valentine:

Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,

And dupp'd¹⁴ the chamber door;

Let in the maid, that out a maid

Never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia!

Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end
on't:

By Gis, and by Saint Charity,¹⁵

Alack, and fie for shame!

Young men will do't, if they come to't;

By cock, they are to blame.

Quoth she, before you tumbled me,

You promis'd me to wed:

[He answers.]

So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,

An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot choose but weep, to think, they should lay him i' the cold ground: My brother shall know of it, and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies: good night, good night.
[Exit.]

King. Follow her close! give her good watch, I pray you. [Exit HORATIO.]

O! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death: And now behold,
O, Gertrude, Gertrude,¹⁶
When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions! First, her father slain;
Next, your son gone; and he most violent author
Of his own just remove: The people muddied, Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,

bly induced our Saviour to transform her into that bird for her wickedness.' The story is related to deter children from illiberal behaviour to the poor.

13 The old copies read:—

'To-morrow 'tis Saint Valentine's day.'

The emendation was made by Dr. Farmer. The origin of the choosing of Valentines has not been clearly developed. Mr. Douce traces it to a Pagan custom of the same kind during the Lupercalia feasts in honour of Pan and Juno, celebrated in the month of February by the Romans. The anniversary of the good bishop, or Saint Valentine, happening in this month, the pious early promoters of Christianity placed this popular custom under the patronage of the saint, in order to eradicate the notion of its pagan origin. In France the Valentinian was a moveable feast, celebrated on the first Sunday in Lent, which was called the jour des bran-dons, because the boys carried about lighted torches on that day. It is very probable that the saint has nothing to do with the custom; his legend gives no clue to any such supposition. The popular notion that the birds choose their mates about this period has its rise in the poetical world of fiction.

14 'To dup is to do up, as to don is to do on, to doff to do off,' &c. Thus in Damon and Pythias, 1592:—'The porters are drunk. will they not dup the gate to-day?'
The phrase probably had its origin from doing up or lifting the latch. In the old cant language to dup the gyger was to open the door. See Harman's Caveat for Curaeors, 1575.

15 Saint Charity is found in the Martyrology on the first of August. 'Roma passio sanctarum virginum Fidel, Spei, et Charitas, quæ sub Hadriano principe martyrium coronam adeptæ sunt.' Spenser mentions her in Ecolg. v. 235. By gis and by cock are only corruptions, or rather substitutions, for different forms of imprecation by the sacred name.

16 In the quarto 1603 the King says:—

'Ah, pretty wretch! this is a change indeed:

O time, how swiftly runs our joys away?

Content on earth was never certain bred,

To-day we laugh and live, to-morrow dead.'

1 To collection, that is, to gather or deduce consequences from such premises. Thus in Cymbeline, Act v. Sc. 5:—

whose containing
Is so from sense to hardness, that I can Make no collection of it.'

See note on that passage.

2 The quartos read—yawn. To aim, is to guess.

3 Folio—would.

4 Unhappily, that is, mischievously.

5 The three first lines of this speech are given to Horatio in the quarto.

6 Shakespeare is not singular in his use of 'amiss as a substantive. Several instances are adduced by Stee-vens, and more by Mr. Nares in his Glossary. 'Each toy,' is each trifle.

7 'There is no part of this play in its representation on the stage more pathetic than this scene; which, I suppose, proceeds from the utter insensibility Ophelia has to her own misfortunes. A great sensibility, or none at all, seem to produce the same effects. In the latter [case] the audience supply what is wanting, and with the former they sympathize.—Sir J. Reynolds.

8 These were the badges of pilgrims. The cockle shell was an emblem of their intention to go beyond sea. The habit being held sacred, was often assumed as a disguise in love adventures. In The Old Wife's Tale, by Peele, 1595:—'I will give thee a palmer's staff of ivory, and a scallop shell of beaten gold.'

12 This (says Mr. Douce) is a common tradition in Gloucestershire, and is thus related:—'Our Saviour went into a baker's shop where they were baking, and asked for some bread to eat. The mistress of the shop immediately put a piece of dough in the oven to bake for him; but was reprimanded by her daughter, who, insisting that the piece of dough was too large, reduced it to a very small size. The dough, however, immediately began to swell, and presently became of a most enormous size. Whereupon the baker's daughter cried out, Heugh, heugh, heugh, which owl-like noise proba-

For good Polonius' death ; and we have done but greenly,¹

In hugger-mugger² to inter him : Poor Ophelia
Divided from herself, and her fair judgment ;
Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts.
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her brother is in secret come from France :
Feeds on his wonder,³ keeps himself in clouds,
And wants not buzzers to infect his ear
With pestilent speeches of his father's death ;
Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our person to arraign
In ear and ear. O, my dear Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering piece,⁴ in many places Gives me superfluous death ! [A noise within.]

Queen Alack ! what noise is this ?⁵

Enter a Gentleman.

King. Attend.

Where are my Switzers ?⁶ Let them guard the door :
What is the matter ?

Gent. Save yourself, my lord ;
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers ! The rabble call him lord ;
And, as the world were now but to begin,
Antiquity forgot, custom not known,
The ratifiers and props of every word,
They cry, Choose we ; Laertes shall be king !
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be king, Laertes king !

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry !
O, this is counter,⁸ you false Danish dogs.

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.]

Enter LAERTES, armed ; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king ?—Sirs, stand you all without.

Danes. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Danes. We will, we will.

[They retire without the Door.]

Laer. I thank you :—keep the door.—O, thou vile
king,

Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

1 Greenly is unskillfully, with inexperience —
2 i. e. secretly. 'Clandestinare, to hide or conceal by stealth, or in hugger mugger.'—Florio. Thus in North's translation of Plutarch :—'Antonius, thinking that his body should be honourably buried, and not in hugger mugger.' Pope, offended at this strange phrase, changed it to private, and was followed by others.
Upon which Johnson remarks :—'If phraseology is to be changed as words grow uncouth by disuse, or gross by vulgarity, the history of every language will be lost :
we shall no longer have the words of any author : and as these alterations will be often unskillfully made, we shall in time have very little of his meaning.'

3 The quarto reads :—'Keeps on his wonder.' The folio :—'Feeds on this wonder.'

4 A murdering-piece, or murderer, was a small piece of artillery ; in French meurtriére. It took its name from the loop-holes and embrasures in towers and fortifications, which were so called. The port-holes in the fore-castle of a ship were also thus denominated.
'Meurtriére, c'est un petit canonnière, comme celles des tours et murailles, ainsi appelle, parceque tirant par celle d'un desceur, ceux auxquels on tire sont facilement meurtis.'—Ficot. 'Visiere meurtriére, a port-hole for a murdering-piece in the fore-castle of a ship.'—Cot-grave. Case shot, filled with small bullets, nails, old iron, &c. was often used in these murderers. This accounts for the raking fire attributed to them in the text, and in Beaumont and Fletcher's Double Marriage :—
'—like a murdering-piece, aims not at me,
But all that stand within the dangerous level.'

5 The speech of the queen is omitted in the quartos.
6 Switzers, for royal guards. The Swiss were then, as since, mercenary soldiers of any nation that could afford to pay them.

7 The meaning of this contested passage appears to me this : 'The rabble call him lord ; and (as if the world were now but to begin, as if antiquity were forgot, and custom were unknown) this rabble, the ratifiers and props of every idle word, cry Choose we, &c.'

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm, proclaims me bastard ;

Cries, cuckold, to my father ; brands the harlot
Even here, between the chaste unsmirched⁹ brow
Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,
That thy rebellion looks so giant-like ?—
Let him go, Gertrude ; do not fear our person ;
There's such divinity doth hedge¹⁰ a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incensed ;—Let him go, Gertrude ;—

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father ?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead ? I'll not be juggled
with :

To hell, allegiance ! vows, to the blackest devil !

Conscience, and grace, to the profoundest pit !

I dare damnation : To this point I stand,—

That both the worlds I give to negligence,¹¹

Let come what comes ; only I'll be reveng'd

Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you ?

Laer. My will, not all the world's :

And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,

They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

If you desire to know the certainty

Of your dear father's death, it's writ in your revenge,

That, sweepstake, you will draw both friend and foe,

Winner and loser ?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them, then ?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms ;

And like the kind life-rendering pelican,

Repeat them with my blood.¹²

King. Why, now you speak

Like a good child, and a true gentleman.

That I am guiltless of your father's death,

And am most sensibly¹³ in grief for it,

It shall as level to your judgment pierce¹⁴

As day does to your eye.

8 Hounds are said to run counter when they are upon a false scent, or hunt it by the heel, running backward and mistaking the course of the game. See Comedy of Errors, Act iv. Sc. 2.

9 Unsmirched is unsoiled, spotless. See Act i. Sc. 3.

10 Quarto 1603—wall. Mr. Boswell has adduced the following anecdote of Queen Elizabeth as an apposite illustration of this passage :—'While her majesty was on the Thames, near Greenwich, a shot was fired by accident, which struck the royal barge, and hurt a waterman near her. The French ambassador being amazed, and all crying Treason, Treason ! yet she, with an undaunted spirit, came to the open place of the barge, and bade them never fear, for if the shot were made at her, they durst not shoot again : such majesty had her presence, and such boldness her heart, that she despised fear, and was, as all princes are, or should be, so full of divine fullness, that guiltie mortalitie durst not behold her but with dazzled eyes.'—Henry Chettle's England's Mourning Garment.

11 'But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer.'—Macbeth.

12 The folio reads politician instead of pelican. This fabulous bird is not unfrequently made use of for purposes of poetical illustration by our elder poets : Shakspeare has again referred to it in King Richard II. and
in King Lear :—

'Twas this flesh begot these pelican daughters.'

In the old play of King Lear, 1603, it is also used, but in a different sense :—

'I am as kind as is the pelican,

That kills itself to save her young ones' lives.'

13 Folio—sensible.

14 Pierce is the reading of the folio. The quarto has 'pear, an awkward contraction of appear. I do not see why appear is more intelligible. Indeed as level is here used for direct, Shakespeare's usual meaning of the word, the reading of the quarto, preferred by Johnson and Stevens, is less proper

Danes. [Within.] Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?

Enter OPHELIA, fantastically dressed with Straws and Flowers.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,
Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!—
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight,
Till our scale turn the beam. O, rose of May!
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
O, heavens! is't possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life?
Nature is fine¹ in love; and, where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him barefaced on the bier;

Hey no nonny, nonny hey nonny:

And in his grave rain'd many a tear;—

Fare you well, my dove!

Laer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade revenge,
It could not move thus.

Oph. You must sing, Down-a-down, an you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel² becomes it! it is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance;
'pray you, love, remember: and there is pansies,
that's for thoughts.³

Laer. A document in madness; thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Oph. There's fennel for you, and columbines:—
there's rue for you; and here's some for me:—we may call it, herb of grace⁴ O' Sundays:—you may

¹ 'Nature is fine in love.' The three concluding lines of this speech are not in the quarto. The meaning appears to be, Nature is refined or subtilised by love, the senses are rendered more ethereal, and being thus refined, some precious portions of the mental energies fly off, or are sent after the beloved object; when bereft of that object, they are lost to us, and we are left in a state of mental privation:—

'Even so by love the young and tender wit,
Is turn'd to folly.'

'Love is a smoke, rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being urg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:
What is it else?—a madness,' &c.

² The wheel is the burthen of a ballad, from the Latin rota, a round, which is usually accompanied with a burthen frequently repeated. Thus also in old French, rotuerie signified such a round or catech, and rotuenge, or rotuenge, the burthen or refrain as it is now called. Our old English term refrette, 'the foot of the ditty, a verse often interlaced, or the burden of a song,' was probably from refrain; or from refresteler, to pipe over again. It is used by Chaucer in The Testament of Love. This term was not obsolete in Cotgrave's time, though it would now be as difficult to adduce an instance of its use as of the wheel, at the same time the quotation will show that the down of a ballad was another term for the burthen. 'Refrain, the refret, burthen, or down of a ballad.' All this discussion is rendered necessary, because Steevens unfortunately forgot to note from whence he made the following extract, though he knew it was from the preface to some black letter collection of songs or sonnets:—'The song was accounted a good one, though it was not moche graced with the wheele, which in no wise accorded with the subject matter thereof.' Thus also Nicholas Breton, in his Toyes for Idle Head, 1577:—

'That I may sing full merrily

Not heigh ho whee, but care away.'

It should be remembered that the old musical instrument called a rote, from its wheel, was also termed vielle, quasi wheel. It must surely have been out of a mere spirit of controversy that Malone affected to think that the spinning-wheel was alluded to by Ophelia.

³ Our ancestors gave to almost every flower and plant its emblematic meaning, and like the ladies of the east, made them almost as expressive as written language, in their hieroglyphical sense. Perdita, in The Winter's Tale, distributes her flowers in the same manner as Ophelia, and some of them with the same meaning. In The Handfull of Pleasant Delities, 1584, recently reprinted in Mr. Park's Heliconia, we have a ballad called 'A Nosesale alwaies sweet for Lovers to send for Tokens,' where we find:—

wear your rue with a difference.—There's a daisy:—I would give you some violets; but they withered all, when my father died:—They say, he made a good end,——

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy,—

Laer. Thought⁴ and affliction, passion, hell itself,
She turns to favour, and to prettiness.

Oph. And will he not come again? [Sings.

And will he not come again?

No, no, he is dead,

Go to thy death-bed,

He never will come again.

His beard was as white as snow,

All flaxen was his poll:

He is gone, he is gone,

And we cast away moan;

God 'a mercy on his soul!⁵

And of all christian souls! I pray God. God be wi' you! [Exit OPHELIA.]

Laer. Do you see this, O, God?

King. Laertes, I must commune⁶ with your grief,
Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me:
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but, if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,

'Rosemarie is for remembrance

Betweene us day and night;

Wishing that I might alwaies have

You present in my sight.'

Rosemarie had this attribute because it was said to strengthen the memory, and was therefore used as a token of remembrance and affection between lovers, and was distributed as an emblem both at weddings and funerals. Why pansies (pensees) are emblems of thoughts is obvious. Fennel was emblematic of flattery, and 'Dare fienochio, to give fennel,' was in other words 'to flatter, to dissemble,' according to Florio. Thus in the ballad above cited:

'Fennel is for flatterers,
An evil thing 'tis sure.'

Browne, in his Britannia's Pastorals, says:—

'The columbine, in tawny often taken,
Is then ascribed to such as are forsaken.'

Rue was for ruth or repentance. It was also commonly called herbgrace, probably from being accounted 'a present remedy against all poison, and a potent auxiliary in exorcisms, all evil things fleeing from it.' By wearing it with a difference (an heraldic term for a mark of distinction) Ophelia may mean that the queen should wear it as a mark of repentance; herself as a token of grief. The daisy was emblematic of a dissembler:—'Next them grew the dissembling daisy, to warne such light of love wenches not to trust every fair promise that such amorous batchelors make.'—Green's Quip for an Upstart Courtier. The violet is for faithfulness, and is thus characterised in The Lover's Nosegale.

⁴ Thought, among our ancestors, was used for grief, care, pensiveness. 'Curarum volvere in pectore. He will die for sorrow and thought.'—Baret. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'Cleopatra. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno.

Think and die.'

⁵ Poor Ophelia in her madness remembers the ends of many old popular ballads. 'Bonny Robin' appears to have been a favourite, for there were many others written to that tune. The editors have not traced the present one. It is introduced in Eastward Hoe, written by Jonson, Chapman, and Marston, where some parts of this play are apparently burlesqued. Hamlet is the name given to a foolish footman in the same scene. I know not why it should be considered an attack on Shakespeare; it was the usual license of comedy to sport with every thing serious and even sacred. Hamlet Travestie may as well be called an invidious attack on Shakespeare.

⁶ The folio reads common, which is only a varied or topography of the same word. 'We will devise and common of these matters.'—Baret.

And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.¹

Laer. Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral.²
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones,
No noble rite, nor formal ostentation,³—
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,
That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall;
And where the offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Another Room in the same. Enter
HORATIO and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with me?
Serv. Sailors,⁴ sir;
They say, they have lettefs for you.

Hor. Let them come in.—
[Exit Servant.]

I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

1 Sail. God bless you, sir.
Hor. Let him bless thee too.
1 Sail. He shall, sir, an't please him. There's a letter for you, sir: it comes⁵ from the ambassador that was bound for England; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor. [Reads.] *Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase: Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour; and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant, they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them.
Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou would'st fly death. I have words to speak in thine⁶ ear, will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore⁷ of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.*

He that thou knowest thine, Hamlet.
Come, I will give you way for these your letters;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another Room in the same. Enter
King and LAERTES.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,

And you must put me in your heart for friend;
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

Laer. It well appears:—But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So crimeful⁸ and so capital in nature,

1 Thus in the quarto, 1603:—

² King. Content you, good Laertes, for a time,
Although I know your grief is as a flood,
Brim full of sorrow; but forbear a while,
And think already the revenge is done
On him that makes you such a hapless son.

³ Laer. You have prevail'd, my lord, a while I'll strive
To bury grief within a tomb of wrath,
Which once unheard, then the world shall hear
Laertes had a father he held dear.

⁴ King. No more of that, ere many days be done
You shall hear that you do not dream upon.

2 Folio—burial.

3 The funerals of knights and persons of rank were made with great ceremony and ostentation formerly.
Sir John Hawkins, (himself of the order,) observes that 'the sword, the helmet, the gauntlet, spurs, and tabard, are still hung over the grave of every knight.'

4 Quarto—sea-faring men. 5 Folio—it came.

6 Folio—your.

7 The bore is the caliber of a gun. The matter, (says Hamlet,) would carry heavier words.

As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

King. O, for two special reasons;
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
But yet to me they are strong. The queen, his mother,

Lives almost by his looks; and for myself,
(My virtue, or my plague, be it either which,
She is so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Why to a public count I might not go,
Is, the great love the general gender⁹ bear him:
Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his gyves to graces;¹⁰ so that my arrows,
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,¹¹
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost;
A sister driven into desperate terms;
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,¹²
Stood challenger on mount of all the age
For her perfections:—But my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for that: you must not think,

That we are made of stuff so flat and dull,
That we can let our beard be shook with danger,¹³
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more:
I lov'd your father, and we love ourself;
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine,—
How now?¹⁴ what news?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet.
This is to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet! who brought them?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say: I saw them not;
They were given me by Claudio, he receiv'd them
Of him that brought them.¹⁵

King. Laertes, you shall hear them:—
Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]
[Reads.] High and mighty, you shall know, I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes: when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return. Hamlet.

What should this mean! Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. Naked,—
And, in a postscript here, he says, alone:
Can you advise me?

Laer. I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so, Laertes,
As how should it be so? how otherwise?—
Will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. Ay, my lord;
So you will not o'er-rule to me to a peace.¹⁶

9 Quarto—Criminal. Greatness is omitted in the folio.

10 I.e. the 'common race of the people.' We have the general and the million in other places in the same sense.

11 'Would, like the spring which turneth wood to stone, convert his fetters into graces:' punishment would only give him more grace in their opinion. The quarto reads work for would.

12 '—my arrows

Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind.'
'Light shafts cannot stand in a rough wind.'—As chan's Toxophilus, 1589, p. 57.

13 'If praises may go back again.' 'If I may praise what has been, but is now to be found no more.'

14 'Idcirco stolidam præbet tibi vellere barbam

Jupiter?' Persius, Sat. i.

15 How now is omitted in the quarto: as is letters in the next speech.

16 This hemistich is not in the folio.

16 First folio omitting Ay, my lord, reads, If so you'll not o'er-rule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—

As checking¹ at his voyage, and that he means No more to undertake it,—I will work him To an exploit, now ripe in my device, Under the which he shall not choose but fall : And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe ; But even his mother shall uncharge the practice, And call it accident.

Laer. My lord, I will be rul'd ;

The rather, if you could devise it so,

That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.

You have been talk'd of since your travel much, And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality Wherein, they say, you shine : your sum of parts Did not together pluck such envy from him, As did that one ; and that, in my regard, Of the unworthiest siege.²

Laer. What part is that, my lord ?

King. A very riband in the cap of youth, Yet needful too ; for youth no less becomes The light and careless livery that it wears, Than settled age his sables and his weeds, Importing health and graveness.—Two months since,

Here was a gentleman of Normandy,—

I have seen myself, and serv'd against the French,

And they can well on horseback : but this gallant

Had witchcraft in't ; he grew unto his seat ;

And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,

As he had been incorp'd and demi-natur'd

With the brave beast : so far he topp'd my thought,

That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,⁴

Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't ?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamord.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well : he is the brooch, indeed,

And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you ;

And gave you such a masterly report,

For art and exercise in your defence,⁵

And for your rapier most especial,

That he cried out, 'twould be a sight indeed,

If one could match you : the scrimers⁶ of their nation,

He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,

If you oppos'd them : Sir, this report of his

Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,

That he could nothing do, but wish and beg

from the 'Governal of Helth,' wherein he takes sythes

(times) to signify sighs. Shakspeare in King Henry VI. has 'blood-consuming sighs.' And in Fenton's

Tragical Discourses : 'Your scorching sighs that have already drained your body of his wholesome humours.' The reading of the old copies, which I have restored, had been altered in the modern editions to 'a spendthrift sigh,' without reason. Mr. Blakeway justly observes, that 'Sorrow for neglected opportunities and time abused seems most aptly compared to the sigh of a spendthrift—good resolutions not carried into effect are deeply injurious to the moral character. Like sighs, they hurt by easing, they unburden the mind and satisfy the conscience, without producing any effect upon the conduct.'

¹⁰ 'He being remiss.' He being not vigilant ; or incautions.

¹¹ i. e. unblunted, to bate, or rather 'to rebate, was to make dull. Acieim ferre hebetare.' Thus in Love's Labour's Lost we have—

'That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge'

And in Measure for Measure :—

'—rebate and blunt his natural edge.'

¹² Pass of practice is an insidious thrust. Shakspeare, in common with many of his contemporaries, always uses practice for art, deceit, treachery.

¹³ Ritson has exclaimed with just indignation and abhorrence against the villainous assassin-like treachery of Laertes in this horrid plot : he observes, 'There is more occasion that he should be pointed out for an object of abhorrence, as he is a character we are led to respect and admire in some preceding scenes.' In the old quarto of 1603 this contrivance originates with the king—in a word,

Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill.'

Massinger's Unnatural Combat.

⁹ Johnson says it is a prevalent notion 'that sighs impair the strength, and wear out the animal powers.' Steevens makes a ludicrous mistake in the quotation

Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.

Now, out of this,—

Laer.

What out of this, my lord ?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you ?

Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,

A face without a heart ?

Laer.

Why ask you this ?

King. Not that I think, you did not love your father ;

But that I know, love is begun by time ;

And that I see, in passages of proof,

Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.

There lives within the very flame of love

A kind of wick, or snuff, that will abate it :

And nothing is at a like goodness still ;

For goodness, growing to a plurisy,⁹

Dies in his own too-much : That we would do,

We should do when we would ; for this would changes,

And hath abatements and delays as many,

As there are tongues, as hands, as accidents ;

And then this should is like a spendthrift's sigh,¹⁰

That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o' the ulcer :

Hamlet comes back ; What would you undertake,

To show yourself in deed your father's son

More than in words ?

Laer.

To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize ;

Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,

Will you do this, keep close within your chamber :

Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home :

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,

And set a double varnish on the fame

The Frenchman gave you ; bring you, in fine, together,

And wager o'er your heads : he, being remiss,¹¹

Most generous and free from all contriving,

Will not peruse the foils : so that, with ease,

Or with a little shuffling, you may choose

A sword unbated,¹² and in a pass of practice,¹³

Requite him for your father.

Laer.

I will do't :

And, for the purpose, I'll anoint my sword.

I bought an unction of a mountebank,

So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,

Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,

Collected from all simples that have virtue

Under the moon, can save the thing from death,

That is but scratch'd withal : I'll touch my point

With this contagion ; that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death.¹⁴

1 To check, to hold off, or fly from, as in fear. It is a phrase taken from falconry :—'For who knows not, quoth she, that this hawk, which comes now so fair to the fist, may to-morrow check at the lure'—Hinde's Eliosto Libidinoso, 1606.

2 'Of the unworthiest siege,' of the lowest rank : siege for seat or place :—

'—I fetch my birth From men of royal siege.' Othello.

3 i. e. implying or denoting gravity and attention to health. If we should not rather read wealth for health.

4 'That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks.'

5 That I, in imagining and describing his feats, &c.

6 Science of defence, i. e. fencing.

7 Scrimers, fencers, from escrimeur, Fr. This unfavourable description of French swordsmen is not in the folio.

8 'But that I know love is begun by time,' &c. 'As love is begun by time, and has its gradual increase, so time qualifies and abates it.' Passages of proof are transactions of daily experience. The next ten lines are not in the folio.

9 Plurisy is superabundance ; our ancestors used the word in this sense, as if it came from plus, pluris, and not from pleura. The disease was formerly thought to proceed from too much blood flowing to the part affected :—

'—in a word, Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill.' Massinger's Unnatural Combat.

9 Johnson says it is a prevalent notion 'that sighs impair the strength, and wear out the animal powers.' Steevens makes a ludicrous mistake in the quotation

from the 'Governal of Helth,' wherein he takes sythes

(times) to signify sighs. Shakspeare in King Henry VI. has 'blood-consuming sighs.' And in Fenton's

¹⁰ 'He being remiss.' He being not vigilant ; or incautions.

¹¹ i. e. unblunted, to bate, or rather 'to rebate, was to make dull. Acieim ferre hebetare.' Thus in Love's Labour's Lost we have—

'That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge'

And in Measure for Measure :—

'—rebate and blunt his natural edge.'

¹² Pass of practice is an insidious thrust. Shakspeare, in common with many of his contemporaries, always uses practice for art, deceit, treachery.

¹³ Ritson has exclaimed with just indignation and abhorrence against the villainous assassin-like treachery of Laertes in this horrid plot : he observes, 'There is more occasion that he should be pointed out for an object of abhorrence, as he is a character we are led to respect and admire in some preceding scenes.' In the old quarto of 1603 this contrivance originates with the king—

King. Let's further think of this ;
Weigh, what convenience, both of time and means,
May fit us to our shape : If this should fail,
And that our drift look through our bad performance,
'Twere better not assay'd : therefore this project
Should have a back, or second, that might hold,
If this should blast in proof : '—Soft, let me see :—
We'll make a solemn wager on your cunning's,²
I ha't :

When in your motion you are hot and dry,
(As makes your bouts more violent to that end,)
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd³ him
A chalice for the nonce ; whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,⁴
Our purpose may hold there. But stay, what noise?⁵

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen ?

Queen. One wo doth tread upon another's heel,
So fast they follow :—Your sister's drown'd, Laertes.
Laer. Drown'd ! O, where ?

Queen. There is a willow grows ascaunt⁶ the brook,

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream :
Therewith fantastic garlands did she make
Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,⁷
That liberal⁸ shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them :
There on the pendant boughs her coronet weeds
Clambling to hang, an envious sliver broke ;
When down her weedy trophies, and herself,
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide ;

And, mermaid-like, awhile they bore her up :
Which time, she chanted snatches of old tunes ;⁹

As one incapable¹⁰ of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indu'd¹¹
Unto that element : but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pul'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas, then, she is drown'd ?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears : But yet¹²
It is our trick ; nature her custom holds,
Let shame say what it will : when these are gone,

'When you are hot in midst of all your play,
Among the foils shall a keen rapier lie,
Steeped in a mixture of deadly poison,
That if it draws but the least dram of blood
In any part of him, he cannot live.'

1 If this should blast in proof, as fire arms sometimes burst in proving their strength.

2 Cunning is skill.

3 The quarto reads prefar'd ; the folio prepar'd. The modern editors read preferr'd, but I think without good reason.

4 A stuck is a thrust. Stoccata, Ital. Sometimes called a staccado in English.

5 'But stay, what noise?' these words are not in the folio.

6 Ascaunt, thus the quarto : the folio reads aslant.
Ascaunce is the same as askew, sideways, overthwart ;
a travers, Fr.

7 The ancient botanical name of the long purples was testiculis morionis, or orchis priapiscus. The grosser name to which the queen alludes is sufficiently known in many parts of England. It had kindred appellations in other languages. In Sussex it is said to be called dead men's hands. Its various names may be seen in Lye's Herbal, 1579, or in Cotgrave's Dictionary.

8 i. e. licentious. See Much Ado about Nothing, Act
iv. Sc. 1, and Othello, Act ii. Sc. 1.

9 The quarto reads 'snatches of old lauds,' i. e.
hymns. Hymns of praise were so called from the psalm Laudate Dominum.

10 i. e. unsusceptible of it. See note 10, p. 496.

11 Indu'd was anciently used in the sense of endowed with qualities of any kind, as in the phrase, 'a child indu'd with the grace and dexterity that his father had.'
Shakespeare may, however, have used it for habited, accustomed.

12 Thus the quarto 1603 :—

'Therefore I will not drown thee in my tears,
Revenge it must yield this heart relief,
For wo begets wo, and grief hangs on grief.'

The woman will be out.¹³—Adieu, my lord !

I have a speech of fire, that fain would blaze,

But that this folly drowns¹⁴ it. [Exit.]

King. Let's follow, Gertrude :

How much I had to do to calm his rage !

Now fear I, this will give it start again ;

Therefore, let's follow. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Church Yard. Enter Two Clowns,
with Spades, &c.

1 Cl. Is she to be buried in Christian burial, that wilfully seeks her own salvation ?

2 Cl. I tell thee she is ; therefore make her grave straight :¹⁵ the crowner hath set on her, and finds it Christian burial.

1 Cl. How can that be unless she drowned herself in her own defence ?

2 Cl. Why, 'tis found so.

1 Cl. It must be se offendendo ; it cannot be else. For here lies the point : If I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act ; and an act hath three branches ; it is, to act, to do, and to perform ;¹⁶
Argal, she drowned herself wittingly.

2 Cl. Nay, but hear you, Goodman delver.

1 Cl. Give me leave. Here lies the water ;
good ; here stands the man ; good : If the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes ; mark you that : but if the water come to him, and drown him, he drowns not himself : Argal, he that is not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life.

2 Cl. But is this law ?

1 Cl. Ay, marry is't ; crowner's-quest law.

2 Cl. Will you ha' the truth on't ? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out of Christian burial.

1 Cl. Why, there thou say'st : And the more pity ; that great folks shall have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves more than their even-Christian.¹⁷ Come, my spade, there is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers : they hold up Adam's profession.

2 Cl. Was he a gentleman ?

1 Cl. He was the first that ever bore arms.

13 Thus in King Henry V. Act iv. Sc. 6 :—

'But all my mother came into my eyes,

And gave me up to tears.'

14 The folio reads—doubts it.

15 How Johnson could think that any particular mode of making Ophelia's grave was meant I cannot imagine.
Nothing is so common as this mode of expression :
straight is merely a contraction of straightway, immediately. Numerous examples are to be found in Shakspeare ; one may suffice from this very play : in Act iii.
Sc. 4. Polonius says :—

'He will come straight.'

And Malone cites from G. Herbert's Jacula Prudentium, 1651 :—'There is no churchyard so handsome that a man would desire straight to be buried there.'

16 Warburton says that this is a ridicule on scholastic divisions without distinction ; and of distinctions without difference. Shakespeare certainly aims at the legal subtleties used upon occasion of inquests. Sir John Hawkins points out the case of Dame Hales, in Plowden's Commentaries. Her husband Sir James drowned himself in a fit of insanity (produced, as it was supposed, by his having been one of the judges who condemned Lady Jane Grey,) and the question was about the forfeiture of a lease. There was a great deal of this law logic used on the occasion, as whether he was the agent or patient ; or in other words, (as the clown says,) whether he went to the water, or the water came to him. Malone thinks because Plowden was in law French that Shakespeare could not read him ! and yet Malone has shown that Shakespeare is very fond of legal phraseology, and supposes that he must have passed some part of his life in the office of an attorney.

17 Even-Christian, for fellow-Christian, was the old mode of expression ; and is to be found in Chaucer and the Chroniclers. Wickliffe has even-servant for fellow-servant. The fact is, that even, like, and equal were synonymous.

2 Clo. Why, he had none.¹

1 Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the scripture? The scripture says, Adam digged: Could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2 Clo. The gallows-maker, for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well: But how does it well? it does well to those that do ill: now thou dost ill, to say, the gallows is built stronger than the church; argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again: come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright or a carpenter?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.²

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

2 Clo. To't.

2 Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, at a distance.

1 Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating: and, when you are asked this question next, say, a grave-maker; the houses that he makes, last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Vaughan, and fetch me a stoup of liquor. [Exit 2 Clown.]

1 Clown digs, and sings.

In youth, when I did love, did love,³

*Methought, it was very sweet,
To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behove,
O, methought there was nothing meet.*

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave-making.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so: the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

1 Clo. *But age, with his stealing steps
Hath claw'd me in his clutch,
And hath shipped me into the land,
As if I had never been such.*

[Throws up a scull.]

Ham. That scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jawbone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician,

¹ This speech and the next, as far as arms, is not in the quarto.

² 'Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.' This was a common phrase for giving over or ceasing to do a thing, a metaphor derived from the unying of oxen at the end of their labour. Thus in a Dittie of the Workmen of Dover, preserved in the additions to Holinshed:—

'My bow is broke, I would unyoke,
My foot is sore, I can worke no more.'

These pithy questions were doubtless the fireside amusement of our rustic ancestors. Steevens mentions a collection of them in print, preserved in a volume of scarce tracts in the university library at Cambridge, D. 5. 2. 'The innocence of these demandes joyous (he says) may deserve a praise not always due to their delicacy.'

³ The original ballad from whence these stanzas are taken is printed in Tottel's Miscellany, or 'Songes and Sonnettes' by Lord Surrey and others, 1557. The ballad is attributed to Lord Vaux, and is printed by Dr. Percy in the first volume of his Reliques of Antient Poetry. The ohs and the ahs were most probably meant to express the interruption of the song by the forcible emission of the grave digger's breath at each stroke of the mattock. The original runs thus:—

'I lothe that I did love;
In youth that I thought sweet:
As time requires for my behove,
Methinks they are not mete.'

'For age with stealing steps
Hath claude me with his crouch;
And lusty youth away he leaps,
As there had bene none such.'

4 The folio reads—ore-offices which this ass now o'erreaches;⁴ one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier; which could say, Good-morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord? This might be my lord such-a-one, that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it; might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so: and now my lady Worm's;⁵ chapless, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade: Here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats⁶ with them? mine ache to think on't.

1 Clo. *A pickaxe and a spade, a spade,
For—and a shrouding sheet
O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.*

[Throws up a scull.]

Ham. There's another: Why may not that be the scull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddits⁷ now, his quillets, his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce⁸ with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Humph! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers,⁹ his recoveries: Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries,¹⁰ to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? ha?

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calves-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance¹¹ in that. I will speak to this fellow:—Whose grave's this, sirrah?

1 Clo. Mine sir.—

*O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.* [Sings.]

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed, for thou liest in't.

1 Clo. You lie out on't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

5 '—My lord, you gave
Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on: it is yours, because you liked it.'

Timon of Athens, Act I.

6 The skull that was my lord such-a-one's is now my lady Worm's.

7 Loggets, small logs or pieces of wood. Hence loggets was the name of an ancient rustic game, in which a stake was fixed in the ground at which loggats were thrown; in short, a ruder kind of quoit play.

8 Quiddits are quirks, or subtle questions: and quillets are nice and frivolous distinctions. The etymology of this last foolish word has plagued many learned heads. I think that Blount, in his Glossography, clearly points out quodlibet as the origin of it. Bishop Wilkins calls a quillet 'a frivolousness'; and Coles, in his Latin Dict. res frivola. I find the quarto of 1603 has quirks instead of quiddits.

9 See Comedy of Errors, Act I. Sc. 2. note.

10 Shakspeare here is profuse of his legal learning. Riton, a lawyer, shall interpret for him:—'A recovery with double voucher, is the one usually suffered, and is so called from two persons (the latter of whom is always the common crier, or some such inferior person,) being successively voucher, or called upon to warrant the tenant's title. Both fines and recoveries are fictions of law, used to convert an estate tail into a fee simple. Statutes are (not acts of parliament,) but statutes merchant, and staple, particular modes of recognizance or acknowledgment for securing debts, which thereby become a charge upon the party's land. Statutes and recognizances are constantly mentioned together in the covenants of a purchase deed.'

11 'Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries,' omitted in the quarto.

12 A quibble is intended. Deeds (of parchment) are called the common assurances of the realm

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't, and say it is thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again, from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1 Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman, then?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

1 Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card,¹ or equivocation will undo us. By the lord, Horatio, these three² years I have taken note of it; the age is grown so picked,³ that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe.—How long hast thou been a grave maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days i' the year, I came to 't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.⁴

Ham. How long's that since?

1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: It was that very day that young Hamlet was born:⁵ he that is mad, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he.⁶

Ham. How came he mad?

1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

1 Clo. 'Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark; I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he rot?

1 Clo. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die, (as we have many pocky corsers now-a-days, that scarce will hold the laying in), he will last you some eight year, or nine year: a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?

1 Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while; and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a scull now hath lain you i' the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

1 Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was; Whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue, he poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once, This same scull, sir, was Yorick's scull, the king's jester.

1 'To speak by the card,' is to speak precisely, by rule, or according to a prescribed course. It is a metaphor from the seaman's card or chart by which he guides his course.

2 Seven, quarto, 1603.

3 Picked is curious, over nice. Thus in the Cambridge Dict. 1594:—'Conquisitus, exquisite, and picked, perfite, fine, dainty, curious.' See King John, Act I. Sc. 1.

4 'Look you, here's a scull hath been here this dozen year, let me see, ay, ever since our last King Hamlet slew Fortinbras in combat: young Hamlet's father, he that's mad.' Quarto of 1603. It will be seen that the poet places this event thirty years ago in the present copy. See the next note by Sir William Blackstone.

5 By this scene, it appears that Hamlet was then thirty years old, and knew Yorick well, who had been dead twenty-three years. And yet in the beginning of the play he is spoken of as a very young man, one that designed to go back to school, i. e. to the university of Wittenburgh. The poet in the fifth act had forgot what he wrote in the first.—Blackstone.

6 Nimirum insanus paucis videatur; eo quod

Maxima pars hominum morbo jactatur eodem.

Horat. Sat. 3, Lib. ii.

Ham. This?

1 Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Alas, poor Yorick!—I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy; he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips, that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite chap-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber,⁸ and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour⁹ she must come; make her laugh at that.—Prythee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander look'd o' this fashion i' the earth?

Hor. E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah!

[Throws down the Scull.

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, 'faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam: And why of that loam, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer barrel?

Imperious¹⁰ Caesar, dead, and turn'd to clay,

Might stop a hole to keep the wind away:

O, that the earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw!¹¹
But soft! but soft! aside:—Here comes the king,

Enter Priests, &c. in Procession; the Corpse of OPHELIA, LAERTES, and Mourners, following;
King, Queen, their Trains, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: Who is this they follow?
And with such maimed rites! This doth betoken,
The corse, they follow, did with desperate hand
Fordo¹² its own life. 'Twas of some estate.¹³
Couch we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring with HORATIO.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A very noble youth: Mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

*1 Priest.*¹⁴ Her obsequies have been as far enlarged

As we have warranty: Her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers,
Shards,¹⁵ flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her,
Yet here she is allowed her virgin crants,¹⁶

7 Folio—jeering.

8 Quarto—table.

9 Favour is countenance, complexion.

10 Imperial is substituted in the folio. Vide Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 5.

11 A flaw is a violent gust of wind. See Coriolanus, Act v. Sc. 3.

12 To fordo is to undo, to destroy. Thus in Othello:—
'—This is the night

'That either makes me or fordoes me quite.'
'Would to God it might be leful for me to fordoe myself, or to make an end of me.'—Acolastus, 1529.

13 Estate for rank. Estates was a common term for persons of rank.

14 Quarto—Doctor.

15 Shards, does not only mean fragments of pots and tiles, but rubbish of any kind. Baret has 'shardes of stones, fragmentum lapidis;' and 'shardes, or pieces of stones broken and shattered, rubbel or rubbish of old houses.' Our version of the Bible has preserved to us potsherds; and I have heard bricklayers, in Surrey and Sussex, use the compounds tile-sherds, slate-sherds, &c.

16 i. e. garlands. Still used in most northern languages, but no other example of its use among us has

Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

1 Priest. No more be done!

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem,¹ and such rest to her
As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth ;—
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh,
May violets spring!²—I tell thee, churlish priest,
A minist'ring angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia

Queen. Sweets to the sweet: Farewell!

[Scattering Flowers]

I hop'd thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife;
I thought, thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not have strew'd thy grave.

Laer. O, treble wo
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head,
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee of!—Hold off the earth a while,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms:

[Leaps into the Grave.]

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead;
Till of this flat a mountain you have made
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he, whose grief
Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wandering stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? this is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

[Leaps into the Grave.]

Laer. The devil take thy soul!

[Grappling with him.]

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.

I pry'thee, take thy fingers from my throat;
For, though I am not splenetic and rash,
Yet have I in me something dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear: Hold off thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet!

All. Gentlemen,—

Hor. Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the Grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme,
Until my eyelids will no longer wag.

Queen. O, my son! what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thousand brothers
Could not, with all their quantity of love
Make up my sum.—What wilt thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes.

yet offered itself. It is thought that Shakespeare may have met with the word in some old history of Hamlet, which furnished him with his fable. The editor of the first folio changed this unusual word for rites, a less appropriate word. Warburton boldly substituted chants, and Mr. Alexander Chalmers affirms that this is the true word.

1 A requiem is a mass sung for the rest of the soul of the dead. So called from the words—

'Requiem æternam dona eis, Domine,' &c.

part of the service.

2 '—tumulo fortunataque favilla

Nascentur violæ?' Persius, Sat. i.

3 The quarto of 1603 reads:—'Wilt drink up vessels?' and instead of Ossa, Ossell. Some of the commentators have supposed that by essil Hamlet means vinegar. But surely the strain of exaggeration and rant of the rest of the speech requires some more impossible feat than that of drinking up vinegar. What river, lake, or firth Shakespeare meant to designate is uncertain, perhaps the Issel, but the firth of Lyse is nearest to his scene of action, and near enough in name. What the late editors meant by their strange contraction of wouldst I know not. Mr. Gifford observes that they appear none of them to have understood the grammatical construction of the passage. Woo't or woot'o, in the northern counties, is the common contraction of wouldst thou, and this is the reading of the old copies.—This sort of hyperbole Malone has shown was common with our ancient poets:—
'Come, drink up Rhine, Thames, and Meander dry.'

Eastward Hoe, 1609.

'Else would I set my mouth to Tygris streams,
And drink up overflowing Euphrates.'

Greene's Orlando Furioso 1599

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. Zounds, show me what thou'lt do:
Woo't weep? woo't fight? woo't fast? woo't tear thyself,

Woo't drink up esile,³ eat a crocodile?

I'll do't.—Dost thou come here to whine?

To outface me with leaping in her grave?

Be buried quick with her, and so will I:

And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw

Millions of acres on us; till our ground,

Singing his pate against the burning zone,

Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou't mouth,

I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen.

This is mere madness:

And thus awhile the fit will work on him;

Anon, as patient as the female dove,

When that her golden couplets are disclosed,⁴

His silence will sit drooping.

Ham.

Hear you, sir;

What is the reason that you use me thus?

I lov'd you ever: But it is no matter;

Let Hercules himself do what he may,

The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. [Exit.]

King. I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him.—

[Exit HORATIO.]

Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;

[To LAERTES.]

We'll put the matter to the present push.—

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.—

This grave shall have a living monument:

An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;

Till then, in patience our proceeding be. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the Castle. Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other;—

You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting
That would not let me sleep: methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines⁵ in the bilboes.⁶ Rashly,
And prais'd be rashness for it,—Let us know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do palpe:⁷ and that should teach us,

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,

Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor.

That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,

My sea-gown⁸ scarf'd about me, in the dark

Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire;

Finger'd their packet: and, in fine, withdrew

To mine own room again: making so bold,

My fears forgetting manners, to unseal

Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,

A royal knavery; an exact command,—

4 See note on Act iii. Sc. 1. The golden couplets alludes to the dove only laying two eggs. The young nestlings when first disclosed are only covered with a yellow down, and the mother rarely leaves the nest, in consequence of the tenderness of her young.

5 i. e. mutineers. See King John, Act ii. Sc. 2.

6 The bilboes were bars of iron with fetters annexed to them, by which mutinous or disorderly sailors were anciently linked together. The word is derived from Bilboa, in Spain, where implements of iron and steel were fabricated. To understand Shakespeare's allusion, it should be known that as these fetters connected the legs of the offenders very closely together, their attempts to rest must be as fruitless as those of Hamlet, in whose mind there was a kind of fighting that would not let him sleep. Every motion of one must disturb his partner in confinement. The bilboes are still shown in the Tower, among the other spoils of the Spanish Armada.

7 To palpe was to fade or fall away; to become, as it were, dead, or without spirit: from the old French passer. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'I'll never follow thy palpe'd fortunes more.'

8 Malone has told us that the sea-gown appears to have been the usual dress of seamen in Shakespeare's time; but not a word of what it was like. 'Eclavine,' (says Cotgrave), a sea-gowne, a coarse high-collared and short-sleeved gowne, reaching to the mid-leg, and used mostly by seamen and sailors.'

Larded with many several sorts of reasons,—
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho! such bugs¹ and goblins in my life,—
That on the supervise,² no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, 'beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villanies,
Or³ I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play;—I sat me down;
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair:
I once did hold it, as our statist⁴ do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service:⁵ Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,—
As England was his faithful tributary;
As love between them like the palm might flourish;
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
And stand a comma⁶ 'tween their amities;
And many such like ases of great charge,—
That, on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debate further, more, or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shirving time allow'd.⁷

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordant;
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal:
Folded the writ up in form of the other;
Subscrib'd it; gave't the impression; plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known: Now, the next day
Was our seaflight; and what to this was sequent
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;

They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own insinuation grow:

'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this?

Ham. Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon?⁸

He that hath kill'd my king, and whor'd my mother;
Popp'd in between the election and my hopes;

1 'With, ho! such bugs and goblins in my life.'—
'With such causes of terror arising from my character and designs.' Bugs were no less terrific than goblins.
We now call them bugbears.

2 '—on the supervise, no leisure bated.' The supervise is the looking over; no leisure bated means without any abatement or intermission of time.

3 'Or,' for ere, before. See Tempest, Act I. Sc. 2.

4 Statists are statesmen. Blackstone says, that 'most of our great men of Shakspeare's time wrote very bad hands; their secretaries very neat ones.' This must be taken with some qualification; for Elizabeth's two most powerful ministers, Leicester and Burleigh, both wrote good hands. It is certain that there were some who did write most wretched scrawls, but probably not from affectation; though it was accounted a mechanical and vulgar accomplishment to write a fair hand. The worst and most unintelligible scrawls I have met with, are Sir Richard Sackville's, in Elizabeth's time; and the miserable scribbling of Secretary Conway, of whom James said they had given him a secretary that could neither write nor read.

5 Yeoman's service I take to be good substantial service. The ancient yeomen were famous for their staunch valour in the field; and Sir Thomas Smyth says, they were 'the stable troop of footmen that affraide all France.'

6 '—stand a comma 'tween their amities.' This is oddly expressed, as Johnson observes: but the meaning appears to be, 'Stand as a comma, i.e. as a note of connexion between their amities, to prevent them from being brought to a period.'

Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage; is't not perfect conscience,
To quit him with this arm; and is't not to be damn'd,
To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil?

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England,

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;
And a man's life no more than to say, one.

But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;
For by the image of my cause, I see
The portraiture of his: I'll count⁹ his favours:
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace: who comes here?

Enter OSRIC.¹⁰

Os. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost thou know this water-fly?¹¹

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis a vice to know him: He hath much land and fertile;
let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'Tis a cough; but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Os. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit: Your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Os. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, sir, 'tis very cold: the wind is northerly.

Os. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry and hot; or my complexion—

Os. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry,¹²—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how.—My lord, his majesty bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[HAMLET moves him to put on his Hat.]

Os. Nay, good my lord; for my ease in good faith,¹³ Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes:
believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences,¹⁴ of very soft society, and great showing: Indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card¹⁵ or, calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent¹⁶ of what part a gentleman would see.

7 'Not shirving-time allow'd.' That is, without allowing time for the confession of their sins.

8 'Beshink thee, does it not become incumbent upon me to requite him,' &c. Vide note upon King Richard II. Act II. Sc. 3. This passage and the three following speeches are not in the quartos.

9 '—I'll count his favours.' Rowe changed this to 'I'll court his favour;' but there is no necessity for change. Hamlet means, 'I'll make account of his favours,' i.e. of his good will; for this was the general meaning of favours in the poet's time.

10 The quarto of 1603—'Enter a braggart Gentleman.'

11 In Troilus and Cressida, Thersites says, 'How the poor world is pestered with such water-flies; dimi-natives of nature.' The gnats and such like ephemeral insects are not inapt emblems of such busy triflers as Osric.

12 'Exceedingly, my lord; 'tis very sultry.'

'—igniculum brumæ si tempore poscas
Accipit endromidem; si dixeris æstuo, sudat.'

Juvenal

13 The folio omits this and the following fourteen speeches; and in their place substitutes, 'Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.'

14 i.e. distinguishing excellencies.

15 'The card or calendar of gentry.' The general preceptor of elegance; the card (chart) by which a gentleman is to direct his course; the calendar by which he is to order his time.

16 You shall find in him the continent of what part a

Ham. Sir, his defilement suffers no perdition in you;—though, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory; and yet but raw neither, in respect of his quick sail. But in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dearth¹ and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror; and, who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more.²

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osr. Sir?

Hor. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue! You will do't, sir, really.³

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Hor. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Osr. I know, you are not ignorant—

Ham. I would, you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me.⁴—Well, sir.

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.⁵

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed⁶ he's unfellowed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons: but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses: against the which he has impawned,⁷ as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers,⁸ and so: Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.

gentleman would see." You shall find him containing and comprising every quality which a gentleman would desire to contemplate for imitation. Perhaps we should read, 'You shall find him the continent.'

1 Dearth, according to Tooke, is 'the third person singular of the verb to dere; it means some cause which dereth, i. e. maketh dear; or hurteth, or doth mischief.' That dearth was, therefore, used for scarcity, as well as deariness, appears from the following passage in a MS. petition to the council, by the merchants of London, 6 Edw. VI.: speaking of the causes of the deariness of cloth, they say, 'This detriment cometh through the dearth of wool, the procurers whereof being a few in number for the augmentation of the same.'—Conway Papers.

2 This speech is a ridicule of the Euphuism, or court jargon of that time.

3 'Is it not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.' This interrogatory remark is very obscure. The sense may be, 'Is it not possible for this fantastic fellow to understand in plainer language? You will, however, imitate his jargon admirably, really, sir.' It seems very probable that 'another tongue, is an error of the press for 'mother tongue.'

4 'If you did, it would not tend much toward proving me or confirming me.'—What Hamlet would have added we know not; but surely Shakespeare's use of the word approve, upon all occasions, is against Johnson's explanation of it—'to recommend to approbation.' There is no inconsistency in the commentators; they rarely look at the prevalent sense of a word in the poet, but explain it many ways, to suit their own views of the meaning of a passage.

5 'I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him, &c.' I dare not pretend to know him, lest I should pretend to an equality: no man can completely know another, but by knowing himself, which is the utmost extent of human wisdom.

6 Meed is merit. Vide King Henry VI. Part III. Act ii. Sc. 1.

7 'Impawned.' The folio reads imponed. Pignare, in Italian, signifies both to impon and to lay a wager. The stakes are, indeed, a gage or pledge.

8 Hangers, that part of the belt by which the sword was suspended.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Hor. I knew, you must be edified by the margin⁹ ere you had done.

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more german¹⁰ to the matter, if we could carry a cannon by our sides; I would, it might be hangers till then. But, on: Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish: Why is this impawned, as you call it?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits;¹¹ he hath laid on twelve for nine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How, if I answer no?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: if it please his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me: let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odd hits.

Osr. Shall I deliver you so?

Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship.

[Exit. Ham. Yours, yours.—He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for's turn.

Hor. This lapwing¹² runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply¹³ with his dug, before he sucked it. Thus has he, (and many more of the same bevy,¹⁴ that, I know, the drossy age dotes on,) only got the tune, of the time, and outward habit of encounter;¹⁵ a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and, through the most fanned and winnowed opinions;¹⁶ and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

9 'The margin.' The gloss or commentary in old books was usually on the margin of the leaf.

10 i. e. more a kin. 'Those that are german to him, though fifty times removed, shall come under the hangingman.'—Winter's Tale.

11 The conditions of the wager are thus given in the quarto of 1603:—

'Marry, sir, that young Laertes in twelve venies At rapier and dagger, do not get three odds of you.'

12 'This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.' Horatio means to call Osrice a raw, unfledged, foolish fellow. It was a common comparison for a forward fool. Thus in Mere's Wits Treasury, 1598:—'As the lapwing runneth away with the shell on her head, as soon as she is hatched,' &c.

'Forward lapwing, He flies with the shell on his head.' Vittoria Corombona.

13 'He did comply with his dug, before he sucked it.' See Act ii. Sc. 2.

14 The folio reads, 'mine more of the same bevy.'—Mine is evidently a misprint, and more likely for marie (i. e. many) than mine. The quarto of 1604 reads, 'many more of the same breed.'

15 'Outward habit of encounter' is exterior politeness of address.

16 'A kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fanned and winnowed opinions,' &c. The folio reads, fond and winnowed.—The corruption of the quarto, 'prophaned and trennowed,' is not worth attention; and I have no doubt that fond in the folio should be fanned, formerly spelt fan'd, and sometimes even without the apostrophe. Fanned and winnowed are almost always coupled by old writers, for reasons that may be seen under those words in Baret's Alvearie. So Shakespeare himself, in Troilus and Cressida:—

'Distinction with a broad and powerful fan, Puffing at all, winnows the light away.'

The meaning is, 'These men have got the cant of the day, a superficial readiness of slight and cursory conversation, a kind of frothy collection of fashionable prattle, which yet carries them through with the most light and inconsequential judgments; but if brought to the trial by the slightest breath of rational conversation, the

*Enter a Lord.*¹

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now, or whensoever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you, to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou would'st not think, how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord,——

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving,² as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury; there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: Since no man, of aught he leaves,—knows;—what is't to leave betimes.³ Let be.

Enter King, Queen, LAERTES, Lords, OSRIC, and Attendants, with Foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts the hand of LAERTES into that of HAMLET.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I have done you wrong;

But pardon it, as you are a gentleman. This presence⁴ knows, and you must needs have heard,

How I am punish'd with a sore distraction.

What I have done,

That might your nature, honour, and exception, Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness. Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never, Hamlet: If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes, Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it. Who does it then? His madness: If't be so, Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd; His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

bubbles burst; or, in other words, display their emptiness.⁵

¹ All that passes between Hamlet and this Lord is omitted in the folio.

² i.e. misgiving, a giving against, or an internal feeling and prognostic of evil.

³ Since no man, of aught he leaves,—knows;—What is it to leave betimes? This is the reading of the folio; the quarto reads, 'Since no man has aught of what he leaves. What is't to leave betimes.' Has is evidently here a blunder for knows. Johnson thus interprets the passage:—'Since no man knows aught of the state which he leaves, since he cannot judge what other years may produce, why should we be afraid of leaving life betimes?' Warburton's explanation is very ingenious, but perhaps strains the poet's meaning farther than he intended. 'It is true that by death we lose all the goods of life; yet seeing this loss is no otherwise an evil than as we are sensible of it; and since death removes all sense of it, what matters it how soon we lose them.' This argument against the fear of death has been dilated and placed in a very striking light by the late Mr. Green.—See Diary of a Lover of Literature, Ipswich, 1810, 4to. p. 230.—Shakspeare himself has elsewhere said, 'the sense of death is most in apprehension.'

⁴ i.e. the king and queen.

⁵ This line is not in the quarto.

⁶ i.e. unwounded. This is a piece of satire on fantastical honour. Though nature is satisfied, yet he will

Sir, in his audience.⁶

Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evil Free me so far in your most generous thoughts, That I have shot my arrow o'er the house, And hurt my brother.

Laer.

I am satisfied in nature, Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most To my revenge: but in my terms of honour, I stand aloof; and will no reconciliation, Till by some elder masters, of known honour, I have a voice and precedent of peace, To keep my name ungorg'd:⁶ But till that time, I do receive your offer'd love like love, And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely; And will this brother's wager frankly play.— Give us the foils; come on.

Laer.

Come, one for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer.

You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric.—Cousin Hamlet,

You know the wager?

Ham. Very well, my lord;

Your grace hath laid the odds⁷ o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it: I have seen you both:— But since he's better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well: These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play.]

Os. Ay, my good lord.

King. Set me the stoups⁸ of wine upon that table:—

If Hamlet give the first or second hit, Or quit in answer of the third exchange, Let all the battlements their ordinance fire: The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath; And in the cup an union⁹ shall he throw, Richer than that which four successive kings In Denmark's crown have worn; Give me the cups; And let the kettle to the trumpet speak, The trumpet to the cannoneer without, The cannons to the heavens, the heaven to earth, Now the king drinks to Hamlet.—Come, begin;— And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, sir.

Laer. Come, my lord. [They play.]

Ham.

One.

Laer.

No.

Ham.

Judgment.

Os. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer.

Well,—again.

ask advice of older men of the sword, whether artificial honour ought to be contented with Hamlet's apology.

⁷ The king had wagered six Barbary horses to a few rapiers, poniards, &c.; that is, about twenty to one.—These are the odds here meant. The odds the King means in the next speech were twelve to nine in favour of Hamlet, by Laertes giving him three.

⁸ Stoup is a common word in Scotland at this day, and denotes a pewter vessel resembling our wine measures; but of no determinate quantity; for there are gallon-stoups, pint-stoups, mutchkin-stoups, &c. The vessel in which water is fetched or kept is also called a water-stoup. A stoup of wine is therefore equivalent to a pitcher of wine.

⁹ An union is a precious pearl, remarkable for its size. 'And hereupon it is that our dainties and delicacies here at Rome, &c. call them unions, as a man would say singular, and by themselves alone.' To swallow a pearl in a draught seems to have been common to royal and mercantile prodigality. Thus in the second part of 'If You Know Not Me You Know Nobody':—

'Here sixteen thousand pound at one clap goes,
Instead of sugar. Gresham drinks this pearl
Unto the queen his mistress.'

According to Rondeletus, pearls were supposed to have an exhilarating quality. 'Uniones quæ a conchis, &c. valde cordiale sunt.' Under pretence of throwing a pearl into the cup, the King may be supposed to drop some poisonous drug into the wine. Hamlet subsequently asks him tauntingly, 'Is the union here?'

King. Stay, give me drink : Hamlet, this pearl is thine ;

Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound ; and Cannons shot off within.]

Ham. I'll play this bout first, set it by awhile.

Come.—Another hit ; What say you ? [They play.]

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scant of breath.—

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows :

The queen carouses¹ to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,——

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord ;—I pray you, pardon me.

King. It is the poison'd cup ; it is too late.

[Aside.]

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam ; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think it.

Laer. And yet it is almost against my conscience.

[Aside.]

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes : You do but dally ;

I pray you, pass with your best violence ;

I am afeard, you make a wanton² of me.

Laer. Say you so ? come on. [They play.]

Osr. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

[LAERTES wounds HAMLET ; then, in scuffling, they change Rapiers, and HAMLET wounds LAERTES.]

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come again. [The Queen falls.]

Osr. Look to the queen there, ho !

Hor. They bleed on both sides ;—How is it, my

lord ?

Osr. How is't, Laertes ?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe,

Osrice ;

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen ?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear

Hamlet !

The drink, the drink ;—I am poison'd ! [Dies.]

Ham. O villainy !—Ho ! let the door be lock'd :

Treachery ! seek it out. [LAERTES falls.]

Laer. It is here, Hamlet ; Hamlet, thou art slain ;

No medicine in the world can do thee good,

In thee there is not half an hour's life ;

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,

Unbated,³ and envenom'd : the foul practice

Hath turn'd itself on me : lo, here I lie,

Never to rise again : Thy mother's poison'd ;

I can no more ; the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point

Envenom'd too !—Then, venom, to thy work.⁴

[Stabs the King.]

Osr. and Lords. Treason ! treason !

King. O, yet defend me, friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murd'rous, damned

Dane,

Drink off this potion :—Is the union here ?

Follow my mother. [King dies.]

Laer. He is justly serv'd ;

It is a poison temper'd by himself.—

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet :

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee ;

Nor thine on me ! [Dies.]

Hor. Heaven make thee free of it ! I follow thee

I am dead, Horatio :—Wretched queen, adieu !—

You that look pale and tremble at this chance,

That are but mutes or audience to this act,

Had I but time (as this fell sergeant,⁵ death,

Is strict in his arrest,) O, I could tell you,—

But let it be :—Horatio, I am dead ;

Thou liv'st ; report me and my cause aright

To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it ;

I am more an antique Roman than a Dane,

Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou'rt a man,—

Give me the cup ; let go ; by heaven, I'll have it.—

O, God !—Horatio, what a wounded name,

Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me ?

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicity awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,

To tell my story.—

[March afar off, and Shot within.]

What warlike noise is this !

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from

Poland,

To the ambassadors of England gives

This warlike volley.

Ham. O, I die, Horatio ;

The potent poison quite o'ercrows⁶ my spirit ;

I cannot live to hear the news from England :

But I do prophesy the election lights

On Fortinbras ; he has my dying voice ;

So tell him, with the occurrents, more or less,

Which have solicited,⁷—The rest is silence. [Dies.]

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart ;—Good night, sweet prince ;

And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest !

Why does the drum come hither ? [March within.]

Enter FORTINBRAS, the English Ambassadors, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight ?

Hor. What is it, you would see ?

If aught of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry cries on havoc !⁸—O, proud death !

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,

That thou so many princes, at a shot,

So bloodily hast struck ?

1 Amb. The aight is dismal ;

And our affairs from England come too late :

The ears are senseless, that should give us hearing,

To tell him, his commandment is fulfill'd,

That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead :

Where should we have our thanks ?

Hor. Not from his mouth,

Had it the ability of life to thank you ;

He never gave commandment for their death.

But since, so jump⁹ upon this bloody question,

You from the Polack wars, and you from England,

Are here arriv'd ; give order, that these bodies

High on a stage be plac'd to the view ;

And let me speak, to the yet unknowing world,

How these things came about : So shall you hear

Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts ;¹⁰

1 l. e. the queen drinks to thy good success.

2 l. e. you trifle or play with me as if I were a child.

3 See note on Act iv. Sc. 7.

4 In the quarto of 1603 :—

'The poison'd instrument within my hand'

Then venom to thy venom ; die, damn'd villain :

Come, drink, here lies thy union here. [King dies.]

5 A sergeant was a bailiff or sheriff's officer. Shakspere, in his 74th Sonnet, has likened death to an arrest :—

—when that fell arrest,
Without all bail shall carry me away.'

And Joshua Silvester, in his Dubartas :—

'And death, sergeant of the eternal Judge,
Comes very late,' &c

6 To overcrown, is to overcome, to subdue. 'These noblemen laboured with tooth and nail to overcrown, and consequently to overthrow one another.'—Holinshed's History of Ireland.

7 'The occurrents which have solicited—the occurrences or incidents which have incited.' The sentence is left unfinished.

8 'This quarry cries on havoc !' To cry on, was to exclaim against. I suppose when unfair sportsmen destroyed more game than was reasonable, the censure was to call it havoc.—Johnson.

Quarry was the term used for a heap of slaughtered game. See Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 3.

9 It has been already observed that jump and just, or exactly, are synonymous. Vide note on Act i. Sc. 1

10 'Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts' Of saw-

Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on' by cunning, and forc'd cause;
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall'n on the inventors' heads: all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it.
And call the noblest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow, I embrace my fortune;
I have some rights of memory² in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage doth invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more;
But let this same be presently perform'd,
Even while men's minds are wild; lest more mis-chance,

On plots and errors, happen.

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had he been put on,
To have prov'd most royally: and, for his passage,
The soldier's music, and the rites of war,
Speak loudly for him.—
Take up the bodies:—Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.
Go, bid the soldiers shoot. [A dead March.]

[Exeunt, bearing off the dead Bodies; after which, a Peal of Ordnance is shot off.]

The following scene in the first quarto, 1603, differs materially from the revised play, that it has been thought it would not be unacceptable to the reader:—

Enter Horatio and the Queen.

Hor. Madam, your son is safe arrived in Denmarke,
This letter I even now receiv'd of him,
Whereas he writes how he escap'd the danger,
And subtle treason that the king had plotted,
Being crossed by the contention of the winds,
He found the packet sent to the king of England,
Wherein he saw himself betray'd to death,
As at his next conversion with your grace
He will relate the circumstance at full.

Queen. Then I perceive there's treason in his looks,
That seem'd to sugar o'er his villanies:
But I will sooth and please him for a time,
For murderous minds are always jealous;
But know not you, Horatio, where he is?

Hor. Yes, madam, and he hath appointed me
To meet him on the east side of the city
To-morrow morning.

Queen. O fail not, good Horatio, and withal commend me.

A mother's care to him, bid him a while guinary and unnatural acts, to which the perpetrator was instigated by concupiscence or 'carnal stings.' The allusion is to the murder of old Hamlet by his brother, previous to his incestuous union with Gertrude.

1 i. e. instigated, produced. Instead of 'forced cause,' the quartos read, 'for no cause.'

2 i. e. some rights which are remembered in this kingdom.

Be wary of his presence, lest that he
Fail in that he goes about.

Hor. Madam, never make doubt of that:
I think by this the news be come to court
He is arriv'd: observe the king, and you shall Quickly find, Hamlet being here,
Things fell not to his mind.

Queen. But what became of Gilderstone and Rossencraft?

Hor. He being set ashore, they went for England,
And in the packet there writ down that doom
To be perform'd on them 'pointed for him:
And by great chance he had his father's seal,
So all was done without discovery.

Queen. Thanks be to Heaven for blessing of the prince.

Horatio, once again I take my leave,
With thousand mother's blessings to my son.

Hor. Madam, adieu!

IF the dramas of Shakspeare were to be characterised, each by the particular excellence which distinguishes it from the rest, we must allow to the tragedy of Hamlet the praise of variety. The incidents are so numerous, that the argument of the play would make a long tale. The scenes are interchangeably diversified with merriment and solemnity: with merriment that includes judicious and instructive observations; and solemnity not strained by poetical violence above the natural sentiments of man. New characters appear from time to time in continual succession, exhibiting various forms of life and particular modes of conversation. The pretended madness of Hamlet causes much mirth, the mournful distraction of Ophelia fills the heart with tenderness, and every personage produces the effect intended, from the apparition that in the first Act chills the blood with horror, to the top in the last, that exposes affection to just contempt.

The conduct is perhaps not wholly secure against objections. The action is indeed for the most part in continual progression; but there are some scenes which neither forward nor retard it. Of the feigned madness of Hamlet there appears no adequate cause; for he does nothing which he might not have done with the reputation of sanity. He plays the madman most when he treats Ophelia with so much rudeness, which seems to be useless and wanton cruelty.

Hamlet is, through the whole piece, rather an instrument than an agent. After he has, by the strata-gem of the play, convicted the King, he makes no attempt to punish him; and his death is at last effected by an incident which Hamlet had no part in producing.

The catastrophe is not very happily produced; the exchange of weapons is rather an expedient of necessity, than a stroke of art. A scheme might easily be formed to kill Hamlet with the dagger, and Laertes with the bowl.

The poet is accused of having shown little regard to poetical justice, and may be charged with equal neglect of poetical probability. The apparition left the regions of the dead to little purpose; the revenge which he demands is not obtained, but by the death of him that was required to take it; and the gratification which would arise from the destruction of an usurper and a murderer, is abated by the untimely death of Ophelia, the young, the beautiful, the harmless, and the pious.

JOHNSON.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story is taken from the collection of Novels, by Gio Giral di Cinthio, entitled Hecatommithi, being the seventh novel of the third decad. No English translation of so early a date as the age of Shakspeare has hitherto been discovered: but the work was translated into French by Gabriel Chappuy, Paris, 1594.
The version is not a faithful one: and Dr. Farmer suspects that through this medium the novel came into English.

The name of Othello may have been suggested by some tale which has escaped our researches, as it occurs in Reynold's God's Revenge against Adultery, standing in one of his arguments as follows:—'She marries Othello, an old German soldier.' This history (the eighth) is professed to be an Italian one; and here also the name of Iago occurs. It is likewise found in

S P

The History of the famous Euodanus, Prince of Denmark; with the strange Adventures of Iago, Prince of Saxonia, &c. 1605. It may indeed be urged, that these names were adopted from the tragedy before us: but every reader who is conversant with the peculiar style and method in which the work of honest John Reynolds is composed, will acquit him of the slightest familiarity with the scenes of Shakspeare.—Steevens.

The time of this play may be ascertained from the following circumstances:—Selymus the Second formed his design against Cyprus in 1569, and took it in 1571.
This was the only attempt the Turks ever made upon that island after it came into the hands of the Venetians, (which was in 1473,) wherefore the time must fall in with some part of that interval. We learn from the play, that there was a junction of the Turkish fleet at Rhodes, in order for the invasion of Cyprus; that it first came sailing towards Cyprus; then went to Rhodes, there met another squadron, and then resumed its way to Cyprus. These are real historical facts, which happened when Mustapha, Selymus's general, attacked Cyprus, in May, 1570; which is therefore the true period of this performance.—See Knolle's History of the Turks, p. 338, 346, 367.—Read.

The first edition of this play, of which we have any certain knowledge, was printed by N. O. for Thomas Walkly, to whom it was entered on the Stationers' Books, October 6, 1621. The most material variations of this copy from the first folio are pointed out in the notes. The minute differences are so numerous, that to have specified them would only have fatigued the reader. Walkly's Preface will follow these Preliminary Remarks.

Malone first placed the date of the composition of this play in 1611, upon the ground of the allusion, supposed by Warburton, to the creation of the order of baronets. [See Act iii. Sc. 4, note.] On the same ground Mr. Chalmers attributed it to 1614; and Dr. Drake assigned the middle period of 1612. But this allusion being controverted, Malone subsequently affixed to it the date of 1604, because, as he asserts, 'we know it was acted in that year.' He has not stated the evidence for this decisive fact: and Mr. Boswell was unable to discover it among his papers; but gives full credit to it, on the ground that 'Mr. Malone never expressed himself at random.' The allusion to Pliny, translated by Philemon Holland, in 1601, in the simile of the Pontic Sea; and the supposed imitation of a passage in Cornwallis's Essays, of the same date, referred to in the note cited above, seem to have influenced Mr. Malone in settling the date of this play. What is more certain is, that it was played before King James at court, in 1613; which circumstance is gathered from the MSS. of Vertue the Engraver.

'If (says Schlegel) Romeo and Juliet shines with the colours of the dawn of morning, but a dawn whose purple clouds already announce the thunder of a sultry day, Othello is, on the other hand, a strongly shaded picture; we might call it a tragical Rembrandt.'

Should these parallels between pictorial representation and dramatic poetry be admitted,—for I have my doubts of their propriety,—this is a far more judicious ascription than that of Stevens, who, in a concluding note to this play, would compare it to a picture from the school of Raphael. Poetry is certainly the pabulum of art; and this drama, as every other of our immortal bard, offers a series of pictures to the imagination of such varied hues, that artists of every school might from hence be furnished with subjects. What Schlegel means to say appears to be, that it abounds in strongly contrasted scenes, but that gloom predominates.

Much has been written on the subject of this drama; and there has been some difference of opinion in regard to the rank in which it deserves to be placed. For my own part I should not hesitate to place it on the first. Perhaps this preference may arise from the circumstance of the domestic nature of its action, which lays a stronger hold upon our sympathy; for overpowering as is the pathos of Lear, or the interest excited by Macbeth, it comes less near to the business of life.

In strong contrast of character. In delineation of the workings of passion in the human breast, in manifestations of profound knowledge of the inmost recesses of the heart, this drama exceeds all that has ever issued from mortal pen. It is indeed true that 'no eloquence is capable of painting the overwhelming catastrophe in Othello,—the pressure of feelings which measure out in a moment the abysses of eternity.'

WALKLY'S PREFACE TO OTHELLO,

ED. 1622, 4to.

THE STATIONER TO THE READER.

To set forth a booke without an Epistle, were like to the old English proverbe, 'A blew coat without a badge;' and the author being dead, I thought good to take that piece of worke upon me: To commend it, I will not; for that which is good, I hope every man will commend without intreaty: and I am the bolder, because the Author's name is sufficient to vent his worke. Thus leaving every one to the liberty of judgment, I have ventured to print this play, and leave it the generall censure. Yours,
THOMAS WALKLY.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Venice. A Street. Enter RODERIGO and IAGO.

Roderigo.

TUSH, never tell me, I take it much unkindly, That thou, Iago,—who hast had my purse, As if the strings were thine,—should'st know of this.

Iago. 'Sblood, but you will not hear me:— If ever I did dream of such a matter, Abhor me.

Rod. Thou told'st me, thou didst hold him in thy hate.

1 To cap is to salute by taking off the cap: it is still an academic phrase. The folio reads, 'Off-capp'd.'

2 Circumstance signifies circumlocution.

3 And therefore without circumstance, to the point, Instruct me what I am?

The Picture, by Massinger.

4 Iago means to represent Cassio as a man merely conversant with civil matters, and who knew no more of a squadron than the number of men it contained. He afterwards calls him 'this counter-caster.'

Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city,

In personal suit to make me his lieutenant, Oft capp'd to him;—and, by the faith of man, I know my price, I am worth no worse a place: But he, as loving his own pride and purposes, Evades them, with a bombast circumstance,³ Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war; And, in conclusion, nonsuits My mediators; for, certes, says he, I have already chose my officer. And what was he?

Forsooth, a great arithmetician,⁴ One Michael Cassio, a Florentine, A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife;

4 The folio reads, dambd. This passage has given rise to much discussion. Mr. Tyrwhitt thought that we should read, 'almost damn'd in a fair life;' alluding to the judgment denounced in the Gospel against those 'of whom all men speak well.' I should be contented to adopt his emendation, but with a different interpretation:—'A fellow almost damn'd (i. e. lost from luxurious habits) in the serene or equable tenor of

That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster; unless the bookish theoric,¹
Wherein the togged consuls² can propose
As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiership. But, he, sir, had the election:
And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof;
At Rhodes, at Cyprus; and on other grounds,
Christian and heathen,—must be-lee'd and calm'd
By debitor and creditor, this counter-caster;³
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,
And I (God bless the mark!) his Moorship's ancient.
Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

Iago. But there's no remedy, 'tis the curse of service;
Preferment goes by letter,⁴ and affection,
Not by the old gradation, where each second
Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge yourself,
Whether I in any just term am affin'd⁵
To love the Moor.

Rod. I would not follow him, then.
Iago. O, sir, content you;
I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender; and, when he's old,
casher'd;

Whip me such honest knaves:⁶ Others there are,
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves;
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them, and, when they have lin'd their coats,
Do themselves homage: these fellows have some soul;

And such a one do I profess myself.
For, sir,

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but myself:
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws⁷ to peck at: I am not what I sm.

Rod. What a full fortune⁸ does the thick-lips owe,
If he can carry't thus!

Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him: make after him, poison his delight, his life.' The passage as it stands at present has been said by Stevens to mean, according to Iago's licentious manner of expressing himself, no more than a man 'very near being married.' This seems to have been the case in respect to Cassio. Act iv. Sc. 1, Iago speaking to him of Bianca, says, 'Why, the cry goes that you shall marry her.' Cassio acknowledges that such a report had been raised, and adds—'This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her love and self flattery, not out of my promise.' Iago then, having heard this report before, very naturally alludes to it in his present conversation with Roderigo.—Mr. Boswell suspects that there may be some corruption in the text.

1 i. e. theory. See All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 3.

2 The rulers of the state, or civil governors. The word is used in the same sense in Tamburlaine:—

'Both we will reign the consuls of the earth.'
By togged is meant peaceable, in opposition to warlike qualifications, of which he had been speaking. The word may be formed in allusion to the adage, 'Cedant arma togæ.' The folio reads, 'tongued consuls,' which agrees better with the words which follow:—'mere prattle, without practice.'

3 It was anciently the practice to reckon up sums with counters. To this the poet alludes in Cymbeline, Act v. —'It sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debitor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge. Your neck, sir, is pen, book, and counters.'

Proclaim him in the streets; incense her kinsmen,
And, though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies: though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation on't,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father's house: I'll call aloud.
Iago. Do; with like timorous accent, and dire yell,

As when, by¹⁰ night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

Rod. What ho! Brabantio! signior Brabantio!
ho!

Iago. Awake! what ho! Brabantio! thieves!
thieves! thieves!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves! thieves!

BRABANTIO, above, at a Window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons?
What is the matter there?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock'd?

Bra. Why? wherefore ask you this?
Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are robb'd; for shame,
put on your gown:

Your heart is burst,¹¹ you have lost half your soul;
Even now, very now, an old black ram
Is tupping your white ewe. Arise, arise;
Awake the snorting citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you:
Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I; What are you?

Rod. My name is—Roderigo.

Bra. The worse welcome!
I have charg'd thee, not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,
Being full of supper, and distempering¹² draughts,
Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir, sir,—

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,
My spirit, and my place, have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.¹³

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,
In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are one of those, that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service, you think we are ruf-

4 i. e. by recommendation.

5 'Do I stand within any such terms of propinquity to the Moor, as that I am bound to love him?' The first quarto has assign'd.

6 Knave is here used for servant, but with a sly mixture of contempt.

7 Outward show of civility.

8 This is the reading of the folio. The first quarto reads 'does.'

9 Full fortune is complete good fortune: to owe is to possess. So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'—not the imperious show

Of the full-fortun'd Caesar.'

And in Cymbeline:—

'Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine.'

10 'By night and negligence,' means 'in the time of night and negligence.' Nothing is more common than this mode of expression: we should not hesitate at the expression, 'By night and day.'

11 i. e. is broken.

12 That is, 'intoxicating draughts.' In Hamlet, this king is said to be 'marvellous distemper'd with wine.' See King Henry V. Act ii. Sc. 2.

13 That is, we are in a populous city, mine is not a lone house, where a robbery might easily be committed. Grange is, strictly, the farm of a monastery; grangia; Lat. from grangum: but, provincially, any lone house or solitary farm is called a grange. So in Measure for Measure:—'At the moor'd grange resides this dejected Mariana.'

fians: You'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse; you'll have your nephews' neigh to you: you'll have coursers for cousins, and gennets for Germans.²

Bra. What profane³ wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you, your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.⁴

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are—a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer: I know thee, Roderigo.

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But I beseech you, [If't be your pleasure, and most wise consent, (As partly, I find, it is,) that your fair daughter At this odd-even⁵ and dull watch o' the night, Transported—with no worse nor better guard, But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier,— To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor,— If this be known to you, and your allowance,⁶ We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs; But if you know not this, my manners tell me, We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe, That, from⁷ the sense of all civility, I thus would play and trifle with your reverence: Your daughter,—if you have not given her leave,— I say again, hath made a gross revolt; Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes, In an extravagant⁸ and wheeling stranger, Of here and every where: Straight satisfy yourself:] If she be in her chamber, or your house, Let loose on me the justice of the state For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho! Give me a taper;—call up my people:— This accident is not unlike my dream, Belief of it oppresses me already:— [Exit, from above.]

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you: It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place, To be produc'd, (as, if I stay, I shall,) Against the Moor: For, I do know, the state,— However this may gall him with some check,⁹ Cannot with safety cast¹⁰ him! for he's embark'd With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars, (Which even now stand in act,) that, for their souls, Another of his fathom they have not, To lead their business: in which regard, Though I do hate him as I do hell pains, Yet, for necessity of present life, I must show out a flag and sign of love, Which is, indeed, but sign. That you shall surely find him,

Lead to the Sagittary the rais'd search; And there will I be with him. So, farewell. [Exit.]

1 Nephews here mean grand-children. See King Henry VI. Part I. and King Richard III.

2 i. e. horses for relations. A gennet is a Spanish or Barbary horse.

3 A profane wretch is an unlucky or a wicked one.

4 Faire la bete a deux dos is a French proverbial expression, which needs no explanation. See the notes to any edition of Rabelais, or Le Roux's Dictionnaire Comique.

5 This odd-even appears to mean the interval between twelve at night and one in the morning. So in Macbeth:

“What is the night?”

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

6 i. e. your approbation.

7 That is, in opposition to or departing from the sense of all civility. So in Twelfth Night:—

“But this is from my commission.”

And in The Mayor of Queenborough, by Middleton, 1661:—

“But this is from my business.”

8 Extravagant is here again used in its Latin sense, for wandering. Thus in Hamlet:—“The extravagant and erring spirit.” Sir Henry Wootton thus uses it:—“These two accidents, precisely true, and known to few, I have reported as not altogether extravagant from my purpose.” Parallel, etc. between Buckingham and Enter, below, BRABANTIO, and Servants with Torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is: And what's to come of my despised time,¹¹ Is nought but bitterness.—Now, Roderigo, Where didst thou see her?—O, unhappy girl!— With the Moor, sayst thou?—Who would be a father?—

How didst thou know 'twas she? O, thou deceiv'st me

Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more tapers;

Raise all my kindred.—Are they married, think you?

Rod. Truly, I think, they are

Bra. O, heaven!—How got she out!—O, treason of the blood!—

Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds By what you see them act.—Is there not charms,¹² By which the property of youth and maidhood May be abus'd? Have you not read, Roderigo, Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir; I have, indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother.—O, that you had had her!—

Some one way, some another.—Do you know Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think, I can discover him; if you please To get good guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll call; I may command at most;—Get weapons, ho! And raise some special officers of night.— On, good Roderigo;—I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Street. Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and Attendants.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain men, Yet do I hold it very stuff¹⁴ o' the conscience, To do no contriv'd murder; I lack iniquity Sometimes, to do me service: Nine or ten times I had thought to have jerk'd him here under the ribs.

Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,¹⁵

And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms Against your honour, That, with the little godliness I have, I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, sir, Are you fast married? for, be sure of this,— That the magnifico¹⁶ is much belov'd; And hath, in his effect, a voice potential¹⁷ As double as the duke's; he will divorce you;

Essex.—In is here used for on, a common substitution in ancient phraseology. Pope and others, not aware of this, altered it, and read, ‘To an extravagant’ &c.

9 i. e. some rebuke.

10 That is, dismiss him, reject him.

11 Despised time is time of no value: time in which

‘There's nothing serious in mortality; The wine of life is drawn, and the mere drags Are left this vault to brag of.’

So in Romeo and Juliet:—

“—expire the term

Of a despised life clos'd in my breast.”

12 ‘Is there not charms,’ &c. means is there not such a thing as charms? The second folio reads, ‘Are there not,’ &c.

13 i. e. may be illuded or deceived.

“wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleeper.” Macbeth.

14 This expression to common readers appears harsh. Stuff of the conscience, is substance or essence of the conscience. Shakespeare uses the word in the same sense, and in a manner yet more harsh in Macbeth:— ‘Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff.’

15 ‘Of whom is this said?—Of Roderigo.’ Steevens

16 The chief men of Venice are by a peculiar name called magnifico, i. e. magnificoes. See Ben Jonson's Volpone.

17 i. e. as mighty, as powerful: as double, means as strong, as forcible, as double in effect as that of the dogs, whose voice of course carried great away with it, and who is said to have had extraordinary privileges, influencing every court and council of the state.

Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law, (with all his might, to enforce it on,)
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite:
My services, which I have done the signiory,
Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know,
(Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,
I shall promulgate,) I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege;¹ and my demerits²
May speak, unbonneted,³ to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoues'd⁴ free condition
Put into circumscription and confine
For the sea's worth.⁵ But, look! what lights come yonder?

Enter CASSIO, at a Distance, and certain Officers with Torches.

Iago. These are the raised father, and his friends:
You were best go in.

Oth. Not I: I must be found;

My parts, my title, and my perfect soul,
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

Iago. By Janus, I think no.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!⁶
What is the news?

Cas. The duke does greet you, general;
And he requires your haste, post-haste⁷ appearance,
Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?

Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine;
It is a business of some heat: the galleys
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night at one another's heels;
And many of the consuls⁸ rais'd, and met,
Are at the duke's already: You have been hotly call'd for;

When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent about three several quests,⁹
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.

1 'Men who have sat upon royal thrones.' So in Grafton's Chronicle, p. 443:—'Incontinent, after that he was placed in the royal siege,' &c.

2 Demerits has the same meaning in Shakespeare as merits. Mereo and demereo had the same meaning in the Roman language. 'Demerit, (says Bullokar,) a dessert; also, (on the contrary, and as it is most commonly used at this day,) ill-deserving.'

3 Mr. Fuseli (and who was better acquainted with the sense and spirit of Shakespeare?) explains this passage as follows:—'I am his equal or superior in rank; and were it not so, such are my merits, that unbonnetted, without the addition of patrician or senatorial dignity, they may speak to as proud a fortune,' &c. At Venice, the bonnet, as well as the toge, is a badge of aristocratic honours to this day.

4 i. e. unsettled, free from domestic cares.

5 Pliny, the naturalist, has a chapter on the riches of the sea. The expression seems to have been proverbial. Thus in Davenant's Cruel Brother, 1630:—

'— he would not lose that privilege

For the sea's worth.'

So in King Henry V. Act i.—

'— As rich with praise,
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea,
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.'

6 So in Measure for Measure:—

'The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost!'

7 These words were ordinarily written on the covers of letters or packets requiring the most prompt and speedy conveyance. Often reduplicated thus:—'Haste, haste, haste, post-haste'

8 See note 2, p. 515

9 Quests are here put for messengers; properly it signified searchers. Vile Cotgrave, in questeur.

10 A carrack, or carrick, was a ship of great burthen, a Spanish galleon; so named from carico, a lading, or freight.

11 In the third scene of the third act, Iago says:—

'Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,
Know of your love?

'Oth. From first to last.'

I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you.

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here? [Exit.]

Iago. 'Faith, he to-night hath boarded a land carrack;¹⁰

If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He's married.

Cas. To who?

Re-enter OTHELLO.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?

Oth. Have with you.

Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for you.

Enter BRABANTIO, RODERIGO, and Officers of Night, with Torches and Weapons.

Iago. It is Brabantio:—general, be advis'd;¹¹
He comes to bad intent.

Oth. Hola! stand there!

Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Bra. Down with him, thief!

[They draw on both sides.]

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for you.

Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.—

Good signior, you shall more command with years,
Than with your weapons.

Bra. O, thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her:

For I'll refer me to all things of sense,

If she in chains of magic were not bound,

Whether a maid—so tender, fair, and happy;

So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd

The wealthy curled¹² darlings of our nation,

Would ever have, to incur our general mock,

Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom

Of such a thing as thou: to fear, not to delight.¹⁴

[Judge me the world, if 'tis not ross in sense,¹⁵

That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms;

Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs, or minerals,

That waken motion:¹⁶—I'll have it disputed on;

'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking.

I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,]

Cassio's seeming ignorance might therefore only be affected, in order to keep his friend's secret till it became publicly known.

12 i. e. be cautious, be discreet.

13 Sir W. Davenant uses the same expression in his Just Italian, 1630:—

'The curld and silken nobles of the town.'

Again:—

'Such as the curled youth of Italy.'

It was the fashion of the poet's time for lusty gallants to wear 'a curled bush of frizzled hair.' See Hall's Satires, ed. 1824, book iii. sat. 5. Shakespeare has in other places alluded to the fashion of curling the hair among persons of rank and fashion. Speaking of Tarquin, in The Rape of Lucrece, he says:—

'Let him have time to tear his curled hair.'

And Edgar, in Lear, when he was 'proud in heart and mind,' curled his hair. Turnus, in the twelfth Æneid, speaking of Æneas, says:—

'fedare in pulvere crines

Vibratos calido ferre.'

14 'Of such a thing as thou: a thing to fear (i. e. terrible), not to delight.' So in the next scene:—

'To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on.'

15 The lines in crotchets are not in the first edition, 4to. 1622.

16 The old copy reads, 'That weaken motion.' The emendation is Hamner's. Motion is elsewhere used by our poet precisely in the sense required here. So in Measure for Measure:

'— one who never feels

The wanton stings and motions of the sense.'

And in a subsequent scene of this play:—'But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts.' So in A Mad World, my Masters, by Middleton, 1603:—

'And in myself snoth up adulterous motions.'

To waken is to incite, to stir up. We have in the present play, 'waken'd wrath.' And in Shakespeare's 117th Sonnet, 'waken'd hate.' Brabantio afterwards asserts:—

'That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood
He wrought upon her.'

For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant:—
Lay hold upon him; if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter.—Where will you that I go,
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison: till fit time
Of law, and course of direct session,
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be therewith satisfied;
Whose messengers are here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state,
To bring me to him?

Off. 'Tis true, most worthy signior,
The duke's in council; and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night!—Bring him away:
Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,
Or any of my brothers of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong, as 'twere their own:
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves, and pagans,¹ shall our statesmen be.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Council Chamber.—
The Duke, and Senators, sitting at a Table;
Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition² in these news,
That gives them credit.

1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion'd;
My letters say, a hundred and seven galleys.

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.

2 Sen. And mine, two hundred:
But though they jump not on a just account,
(As in these cases, where the aim³ reports,
'Tis oft with difference,) yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.

Sailor. [Within.] What ho! what ho! what ho!

Enter an Officer with a Sailor.

Off. A messenger from the galleys.

Duke. Now; the business?

Sailor. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;

So was I bid report here to the state,
By signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1 Sen. This cannot be,
By no assay of reason;⁴ 'tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze: When we consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turk;
And let ourselves again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question⁵ bear it,
[For that it stands not in such warlike brace,⁶
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in:—if we make thought of this,
We must not think, the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease, and gain,
To wake, and wage,⁷ a danger profitless.]

Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes, Off. Here is more news.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injointed them with an after fleet.

1 Sen. Ay, so I thought:—How many, as you guess?

Mess. Of thirty sail: and now do they restem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance

Their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
With his free duty recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him.⁸

Duke. 'Tis certain then for Cyprus,— Marcus Lucchese, is he not in town?

1 Sen. He's now in Florence.

Duke. Write from us; wish⁹ him post-post-haste despatch.

1 Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the valiant Moor,

Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ
you

Against the general enemy Ottoman.¹⁰
I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior;

[To BRABANTIO
We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.

Bra. So did I yours: Good your grace, pardon
me;

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business, Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
care¹¹

Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature,
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.

⁶ I.e. in such state of defence. To arm was called to trace on the armour. The seven following lines were added since the first edition in quarto, 1622.

⁷ To wa'e is to undertake. 'To rage law (in the common acceptation) seems to be to follow, to urge, drive on, or prosecute the law or law-suits; as to wage war is præ'iar, beltare, to drive on the war, to fight in battels as warriors do.—Blount's Glossograph.

⁸ 'He entreats you not to doubt the truth of this intelligence.'

⁹ I.e. 'desire him to make all possible haste.' The folio reads:—

'Write from us to h'm, post, post-haste, dispatch.'

¹⁰ It was part of the policy of the Venetian state to employ strangers, and even Moors, in their wars. 'By lande they are served of straungers, both for generals, for capitaines, and for all other men of warre, because theyr lawe permiteth not any Venetian to be capitaine over an armie by lande; fearing, I thinke, Cæsar's example.'—Thomas's History of Italy p. 32. See also Contarini's Republic of Venice, by Lawkenor, 1599, and Howell's Letters, sect. i. let. xxviii.

¹¹ '—juvenumque produs
Publica cura. Hor.

Steevens would read this line thus:—
'Rais'd me from bed; nor doth the general care—' omitting Hath and my, which he considers playhouse interpolations; by which, he says, the metre of this tragedy is too frequently deranged.

¹ This passage has been completely misunderstood.—
Pagan was a word of contempt; and the reason will appear from its etymology:—'Paganus, villanus vel incultus. Et derivatur a pagus quod est villa. Et qui-cunque habitat in villa est paganus. Præterea qui-cunque est extra civitatem Dei, i.e. ecclesiasticus, dicitur paganus. Anglice, a paynim.'—Ortus Vocabulorum, 1538. I know not whether pagan was ever used to designate a clown or rustic; but paganical and paganianlian, in a kindred sense, were familiar to our elder language. Malone thinks that 'Brabantio is meant to allude to the common condition of all blacks, who come from their own country both slaves and pagans;' and that he uses the word in contempt of Othello. If he is suffered to escape with impunity, we may expect to see all our offices of state filled up by the pagans and bond-slaves of Africa.'

² Composition for consistency. It has been before observed that news was considered of the plural number by our ancestors.

³ Aim is guess, conjecture. The quarto reads, 'they aim reports.' The meaning appears to be, 'In these cases where conjecture tells the tale.'—Aim is again used as a substantive in Julius Cæsar:—

'What you would work me to, I have some aim.'
⁴ 'Bring it to the test, examine it by reason, it will be found counterfeit.'

⁵ That he may carry k with less dispute, with diminished opposition.

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Bra. My daughter! O, my daughter!

Sen. Dead?

Bra. Ay, to me;

She is abus'd, stol'n from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks:¹
For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,²
Sans witchcraft could not—

Duke. Whoe'er he be, that, in this foul proceeding,
Hath thus beguild your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter,
After your own sense; yea, though our proper son Stood in your action.³

Bra. Humbly I thank your grace.
Here is the man, this Moor; whom now, it seems,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought.

Duke and Sen. We are very sorry for it.

Duke. What, in your own part, can you say to this? [To OTHELLO.]

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.

Oth. Most potent, grave and reverend signiors,
My very noble and approv'd good masters,
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her;
The very head and front of my offending⁴
Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,
And little bless'd with the set phrase of peace;
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd
Their dearest action⁵ in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking of myself: Yet, by your gracious patience,

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,

What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withal,)
I won his daughter with.⁶

Bra. A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself;⁷ And she,—in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, every thing,—

1 By the Venetian law the giving love-potions was highly criminal, as appears in the Code Della Promissione del Malefico, cap. xvii. Dei Malefici et Herbarie. Shakespeare may not have known this; but he was well acquainted with the edicts of James I. against

—practisers
Of arts inhibited, and out of warrant.⁷

2 This line is not in the first quarto.

3 'Though our own son were the man exposed to your charge or accusation.'

4 The main, the whole unextenuated. 'Frans causæ non satis honesta est,' is a phrase used by Quintilian. A similar expression is found in Tamburlaine, 1599;—

'The man that in the forehead of his fortunes
Beares figures of renown and miracle.'

Again in Troilus and Cressida:—

'So rich advantage of a promis'd glory
As smiles upon the forehead of this action.'

5 The folio reads, 'soft phrase of peace.'

6 'Their dearest action'; that is, as we should say in modern language, their best exertion.

7 The word with, supplied in the second folio, is wanting in the older copies. Malone contends that it is merely an elliptical form of expression, and that the early copies are right.

8 Shakespeare, like other writers of his age, frequently uses the personal instead of the neutral pronoun.

9 Open proofs, external evidence.

10 I. e. weak show of slight appearance. Modern is frequently used for trifling, slight, or trivial, by Shakespeare. The first quarto reads:—

'These are thin habits, and poor likelyhoods
Of modern seemings you prefer against him.'

11 The sign of the fictitious creature so called. See Troilus and Cressida, Act. v. Sc. 5.

12 This line is wanting in the first quarto.

To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on!
It is a judgment main'd, and most imperfect,
That will confess—perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature; and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell,
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again,
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,
Or with some dram conjur'd to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

Duke. To vouch this, is no proof;
Without more certain and more overt test,⁹
Than these thin habits, and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming;¹⁰ do prefer against him.

1 Sen. But, Othello, speak:—
Did you by indirect and forced courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?
Or came it by request, and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth?

Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,¹¹
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you,¹²
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.
Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.— [Exeunt IAGO and Attendants.]

And till she come, as truly¹³ as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.
Oth. Her father lov'd me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year; the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents, by flood, and field:
Of hair-breadth scapes 'tween the imminent deadly breach;

Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And portance¹⁴ in my travel's history:
Wherein of antres¹⁵ vast, and deserts wild,¹⁶

13 The first quarto reads, as faithful: the next line is omitted in that copy.

14 The first quarto reads:—

'And with it all my travel's history.'

By 'my portance in my travel's history,' perhaps, is meant, my carriage or behaviour in my travels, as described in my narration of them. Portance is a word used in Coriolanus:—

'—took from you

The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravely he did fashion,' &c.

15 I. e. caverns; from antrum, Lat. Warburton observes that Rymer ridicules this whole circumstance; and Shaftesbury obliquely sneers at it. 'Whoever (says Johnson) ridicules this account of the progress of love, shows his ignorance, not only of history, but of nature and manners. It is no wonder that, in any age, or in any nation, a lady, recluse, timorous, and delicate, should desire to hear of events and scenes which she could never see, and should admire the man who had endured dangers, and performed actions, which, however great, were magnified by her timidity.'

16 The quarto and first folio read, 'desarts idle'; the second folio reads, 'desarts wilde'; and this reading was adopted by Pope; at which Dr. Johnson expresses his surprise.

Mr. Malone taxes the editor of the second folio with ignorance of Shakespeare's meaning; and idle is triumphantly reinstated in the text. It does not seem to have occurred to the commentators that wild might add a feature of some import, even to a desert; whereas idle, I. e. sterile, leaves it just as it found it, and is (without a pun) the idest epithet which could be applied. Mr. Pope, too, had an ear for rhythm; and as his reading has some touch of Shakespeare, which the other has not, and is besides better poetry, I should hope that it would one day resume its proper place in the text.—Gifford. Notes on Sejanus. Ben Jonson's Works vol.

Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to speak, such was the process;
And of the cannibals that each other eat,
The anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders.¹ These things to hear,

Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house affairs would draw her thence;
Which ever as she could with haste despatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: Which I observing,
Took once a pliant hour; and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intently:² I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore³—In faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange;

'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful:
She wish'd, she had not heard it; yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd

me;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake:
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd;
And I lov'd her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have us'd:
Here comes the lady, let her witness it.

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, and Attendants.

Duke. I think, this tale would win my daughter too.—

Good Brabantio,
Take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use,
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak;
If she confess, that she was half the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man!—Come hither, gentle mistress;
Do you perceive in all this noble company,
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty:
To you, I am bound for life, and education;
My life, and education, both do learn me
How to respect you; you are the lord of duty,

iii. p. 14.—I have followed the suggestion of Mr. Gifford, and restored the reading of the second folio; convinced by his reasoning, and believing that idle might easily be substituted for wilde, in the earlier copies, by a mere typographical error.

1 Nothing excited more universal attention than the accounts brought by Sir Walter Raleigh, on his return from his celebrated voyage to Guiana, in 1595, of the cannibals, amazons, and especially of the nation—

—whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders.

See his Narrative in Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. ed. 1600, fol. p. 652, et seq. and p. 677, &c. A short extract of the more wonderful passages was also published in Latin and in several other languages, in 1599, adorned with copper-plates, representing these cannibals, amazons, and headless people, &c. A copy of one of the plates is given in the variorum editions of Shakspeare. These extraordinary reports were universally credited; and Othello therefore assumes no other character but what was very common among the celebrated commanders of the poet's time.

2 Intention and attention were once synonymous. Intensive, which listeneth well and is earnestly bent to a thing, says Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616.

3 To accer upon faith or honour was considered swearing, equally with a solemn appeal to God. See Whitaker's Vindication of Mary, Queen of Scots, vol. ii. p. 457.

4 i. e. 'let me speak as yourself would speak, were you not too much heated with passion.'—Sir J. Reynolds.

I am hitherto your daughter: But here's my husband;

And so much duty as my mother show'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Bra. God be with you!—I have done:—
Please it your grace, on to the state affairs;
I had rather to adopt a child, than get it.—
Come hither, Moor:

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee.—For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.—I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself;⁴ and lay a sentence,

Which as a grise,⁵ or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended,
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended,
To mourn a mischief that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.

What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.
The robb'd,⁶ that smiles, steals something from the thief;

He robs himself, that spends a bootless grief.

Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He bears the sentence well, that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears:
But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow,
That, to pay grief, must of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:
But words are words; I never yet did hear,
That the bruis'd heart was pierced through the ear.⁷

I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus:—Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you: And though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you; you must therefore be content to slubber⁸ the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down:⁹ I do agnize¹⁰

5 Grise or greese is a step; from gres, French. The word occurs again in Timon of Athens:—

—'for every grise of fortune

Is smooth'd by that below.'

Ben Jonson, in his Sejanus, has degrees in the same sense:—

'Whom when we saw lie spread on the degrees.'

6 This is expressed in a common proverbial form, in Love's Labours Lost:—

'Past cure is still past care.'

7 i. e. 'that the wounds of sorrow were ever cured by the words of consolation.' Pierced is here used for penetrated. Spenser has employed the word in the same figurative sense, Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9:—

'Whose senseful words empierst his hart so neare

That he was rapt with double ravishment.'

8 To slubber here means to obscure. So in Jeronimo, 1605, first part:—

'The evening too begins to slubber the day.'
The latter part of this metaphor has already occurred in Macbeth:—

—'golden opinions—'

Which should be worn now in their newest gloss.'

9 A driene bed is a bed for which the feathers have been selected by *driene*g with a fan, which separates the light from the heavy.

10 To agnize is to acknowledge, confess, or avow.
Thus in a Summarie Report, &c. of the Speaker relative to Mary Queen of Scots, 4to. 1585:—'A repentant convert agnizing her Majesty's great mercie,' &c. It sometimes signified 'to know by some token, to admit, or allow.'

A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness; and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife;
Due reference of place, and exhibition.¹
With such accommodation, and besort,
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please,
Be't at her father's.

Bra. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts,
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding lend a gracious ear;²
And let me find a charter in your voice,³
To assist my simpleness.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence and storm of fortunes⁴
May trumpet to the world; my heart's subdued
Even to the very quality⁵ of my lord:
I saw Othello's visage in his mind;
And to his honours, and his valiant parts,
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rites, for which I love him, are bereft me,
And I a heavy interm shall support.
By his dear absence; Let me go with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords—beseech you, let her will

Have a free way.

Vouch with me, heaven; I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat (the young affects,
In me defunct) and proper satisfaction;⁶
But to be free and bounteous to her mind:
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant,
For' she is with me: No, when light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid seel with wanton dulness
My speculative and active instruments,⁸

1 'I desire that proper disposition be made for my wife, that she may have a fit place appointed for her residence, and such allowance, accommodation, and attendance as befits her rank.' Exhibition for allowance has already occurred in King Lear, and in The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

2 Thus in the quarto 1622. The folio, to avoid the repetition of the same epithet, reads:—

'——— Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding lend a prosperous ear.'
i. e. a propitious ear.

3 That is, 'let your favour privilege me.'

4 By her 'downright violence and storm of fortunes' Desdemona means, the bold and decisive measure she had taken, of following the dictates of passion, and giving herself to the Moor, regardless of her parent's displeasure, the forms of her country, and the future inconveniences she might be subject to, by 'tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes, in an extravagant and wheeling stranger, of here and every where.' This was truly taking her fortunes by storm.

5 Quality here, as in other passages of Shakespeare, means profession. 'My heart is so entirely devoted to Othello, that I will even encounter the dangers of his military profession with him.' The quarto reads, 'My heart's subdued even to the utmost pleasure of my lord.'

6 Stevens reads, at the suggestion of Sir T. Hamner—

'Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In my distinct and proper satisfaction.'

Malone reads disjunct instead of distinct. In the Bondman of Massinger we have a passage evidently copied from this speech of Othello:—

'——— Let me wear
Your colours, lady, and though youthful heats,
That look no further than your outward form,
Are long since buried in me, while I live,
I am a constant lover of your mind.' &c.

Mr Gifford observes that, 'as this shows how Shakespeare's contemporaries understood the lines, it should, I think, with us be decisive of their meaning.'—The

That my disports corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!⁹

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going: the affair cries—haste,
And speed must answer it; you must hence to-night.

Des. To-night, my lord?

Duke. This night.

Oth. With all my heart

Duke. At nine i' the morning here we'll meet again.

Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall cur commission bring to you:
With such things else of quality and respect,
As doth import you.

Oth. Please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty and trust:
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.—

Good night to every one.—And, noble signior,

[To BRABANTIO.]

If virtue no delighted¹⁰ beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

1 Sen. Adieu, brave Moor! use Desdemona well.

Bra. Look to her, Moor; have a quick eye to see;

She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.]

Oth. My life upon her faith.—Honest Iago,

My Desdemona must I leave to thee;

I pr'ythee, let thy wife attend on her;

And bring them after in the best advantage.¹¹

Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour

Of love, of worldly matters and direction;

To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt OTHELLO and DESDEMONA]

Rod. Iago.

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, thinkest thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.

Rod. I will incontinently drown myself.

admirers of Shakespeare cannot but recollect with dismay the prodigious mass of conjectural criticism accumulated on this simple passage, as well as the melancholy preface with which it terminates; that after all 'it will probably prove a lasting source of doubt and controversy.' I confess I see little or rather no occasion for either: nor can I possibly conceive why, after the rational and unforced explanation of Johnson, the worthless reveries of Theobald, Toller, &c. were admitted.—Affects occur incessantly in the sense of passions, affections: young affects are therefore perfectly synonymous with youthful heats. Othello, like Timon, was not an old man, though he had lost the fire of youth; the critics might therefore have dismissed their concern for the lady, which they have so delicately communicated for the edification of the rising generation. Mr. Gifford suggests that Shakespeare may have given affect in the singular to correspond with heat. Affect is also used for passion, in an Elegy on the Death of Sir Thomas Wyatt, by Lord Surrey:—

'An eye whose judgment none affect could blinde,
'Frendes to allure, and foes to reconcile.'

Dr. Johnson's explanation is:—'I ask it not (says Othello) to please appetite, or satisfy loose desires, the passions of youth which I have now outlived, or for any particular gratification of myself, but merely that I may indulge the wishes of my wife.' Upton had previously changed my, the reading of the old copy, to me; but he has printed affects, not seeming to know that affects could be a noun.

7 i. e. cause.

8 Thus the folio; except that, instead of active instruments, it has off'd instrument. The quarto reads 'And feather'd Cupid foils,' &c. Speculative instruments, in Shakespeare's language, are the eyes; and active instruments, the hands and feet. To act is to close up. The meaning of the passage appears to be, 'When the pleasures and idle toys of love make me unfit either for seeing the duties of my office, or for the ready performance of them.'

9 The quarto reads reputation.

10 Delighted for delighting.

11 i. e. fairest opportunity.

Iago. Well, if thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Rod. It is silliness to live, when to live is a torment: and then have we a prescription to die, when death is our physician.

Iago. O, villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years!¹ and since I could distinguish between a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Guinea-hen,² I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess, it is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue? a fig! 'tis in ourselves, that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are our gardens; to the which, our wills are gardeners: so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many; either to have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry: why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance³ of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted⁴ lusts; whereof I take this, that you call—love, to be a sect,⁵ or scion.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: Drown thyself? drown cats, and blind puppies. I have professed me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness; I could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; defeat thy favour with an usurped beard;⁶ I say, put money in thy purse. In cannot be, that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor,—put money in thy purse;—nor he his to her: it was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration;⁷—put but money in thy purse.—These Moors are changeable in their wills:—fill thy purse with money: the food that to him now is as luscious as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as coloquintida.⁸ She must change for youth; when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice.—She must have change, she must; therefore put money in thy purse.—If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst: If sanctimony and a frail vow, betwixt an erring⁹ barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian, be not too hard for my wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing thy joy, than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me;—Go, make money;—I have told thee often, and I retell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: My cause is hearted:¹⁰ thine hath no less reason: Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him: if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse;¹¹ go: provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow—Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i' the morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Rodrigo?

Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear.

Rod. I am changed. I'll sell all my land.

Iago. Go to; farewell: put money enough in your purse. [Exit RODRIGO.]

Thns do I ever make my fool my purse:
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I would time expend with such a snipe,¹²
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
He has done my office: I know not if 't be true;
But I, for mere auspicion in that kind,
Will do, as if for surety.¹³ He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now;
To get his place, and to plume¹⁴ up my will;
A double knavery.—How? how?—Let me see:—
After some time, to abuse Othello's ear,
That he is too familiar with his wife:—
He hath a person; and a smooth dispose
To be suspected; fram'd to make women false,
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest, that but seem to be so;

1 The quarto reads 'as acerb as coloquintida.' The poet had the third chapter of St. Mauehew's Gospel in his thoughts, in which we are told that John the Baptist lived in the wilderness on locusts and wild honey. Mr. Douce observes, that 'there is another phrase of the same kind, viz. to exchange herb John for coloquintida. It is used in Osborne's Memoirs of James I. and elsewhere. The pedantic Tomlinson, in his translation of Renodæus's Dispensatory, says, that many superstitious persons call mugwort St. John's herb, wherewith he circumcinding his foins on holidays. Shakspeare, who was extremely well acquainted with popular superstitions, might have recollected this circumstance, when, for reasons best known to himself, he chose to vary the phrase by substituting the luscious locusts of the Baptist. Whether these were the fruit of the tree so called, or the well known insect, is not likely to be determined. It is said that the insect locusts are considered a delicacy at Tonquin. Bullein says that 'coloquintida is most bitter.'—Bulwarke of Defence, 1579.

9 Erring is the same as erraticus in Latin. So in Hamlet:

'Th' extravagant and erring spirit.'

And in As You Like It:—

'—how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage.'

10 This adjective occurs again in Act iii.:'—hearted throne.'

11 i. e. march.

12 Woodcock was the general term for a foolish fellow. Iago is more sarcastic, and compares his dupe to a smaller and meaner bird of almost the same shape.

13 That is, I will act as if I were certain of the fact. 'He holds me well,' is, he entertains a good opinion of me.

14 The first quarto reads 'to make up.'

1 That Iago means to say he was but twenty-eight years old, is clearly ascertained by his marking particularly, though indefinitely, a period within that time, ['and since I could distinguish,' &c.] when he began to make observations on the characters of men. Waller, on a picture which was painted for him in his youth by Cornelius Jansen, and which is now in the possession of his heir, has expressed the same thought: 'Anno ætatis 23; picta rix primo.'—In the novel, on which Othello is founded, Iago is described as a young handsome man.

2 A Guinea-hen was a cant term for a woman of easy virtue.

3 The folio reads 'if the brain;' probably a mistake for beam.

4 So in A Knack to Know an Honest Man, 1596:—

'—Virtue never taught thee that,
She sets a bit upon her bridled lusts.'

See also As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 4:—

'For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself.'

5 A sect is what the gardeners call a cutting.

6 I have already observed that defeat was used for disfigurement or alteration of features: from the French défaire. Favour means that combination of features which gives the face its distinguishing character.

7 Sequestration is defined to be 'a putting apart, a separation of a thing from the possession of both those that contend for it.' It is not therefore necessary to suppose any change requisite in the text. In another passage of this play we have 'a sequester from liberty.' So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die.'

And will as tenderly be led by the nose,
As asses are.
I have't;—it is engender'd:—Hell and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.
[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Seaport Town in Cyprus. A Platform. Enter MONTANO and Two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?
1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood;
I cannot 'twixt the heaven² and the main,
Descry a sail.

Mon. Methinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at land:

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,³
Can hold the mortise? what shall we hear of this?

2 Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet:
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,⁴
The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous

main,
Seems to cast water on the burning bear,⁵
And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole:
I never did like molestation view
On the enchain'd flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not enshelter'd and embay'd, they are drown'd;
It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a third Gentleman.

3 Gent. News, lords! our wars are done:
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts: A noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance,
On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?
3 Gent. The ship is here put in,
A Veronese:⁶ Michael Cassio,
Lientenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,
Is come on shore: the Moor himself's at sea,
And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

1 All the modern editors, following Rowe, have supposed the capital of Cyprus to be the place where the scene of Othello lies during four Acts: but this could not have been Shakespeare's intention; Nicosia, the capital city of Cyprus, being situated nearly in the centre of the island, and thirty miles distant from the sea. The principal seaport town of Cyprus is Famagusta; where there was formerly a strong fort and commodious haven, 'near which (says Knolles) standeth an old castle, with four towers, after the ancient manner of building.' To this castle we find that Othello presently repairs. Centhis, in the novel, makes no mention of any attack on Cyprus by the Turks; but they took the island from the Venetians in 1570. By mentioning Rhodes as likely to be attacked by the Turks, the historical fact is disregarded; for they were in quiet possession of that island, and had been masters of it since the year 1522; and from 1473, when the Venetians first became possessed of Cyprus, to 1522, they had not been molested by any Turkish armament.

2 The quarto reads:—
'twixt the haven and the main;
and Malone adopts that reading. Perhaps the poet wrote 'the heavens.' A subsequent passage may serve to show that the folio affords the true reading:—

'Let's to the seaside, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in,
As throw our eyes out for brave Othello:
Even till we make the main and the ethereal blue
An indistinct regard.'

3 The quarto of 1622 reads 'when the huge mountainess,' the letter s, which perhaps belongs to mountaine, having wandered at press from its place. In a subsequent scene we have:

'And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high'
And in Troilus and Cressida:—

'The strong ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cuts.'

4 The elder quarto reads 'the banning shore.'

5 The constellation near the polar star. The next

Man. I am glad on't: 'tis a worthy governor.
3 Gent. But this same Cassio,—though he speak of comfort,
Touching the Turkish loss,—yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted
With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. 'Pray heaven, he be;
For I have serv'd him, and the man commands
Like a full soldier. Let's to the seaside, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in,
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello;
Even till we make the main, and the aerial blue,
An indistinct regard.

3 Gent. Come, let's do so;
For every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance.

Enter CASSIO.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike isle,
That so approve the Moor; O, let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well shipp'd?
Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approv'd allowance;⁸
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.⁹

[Within.] A sail, a sail, a sail!

Enter another Gentleman.

Cas. What noise?
4 Gent. The town is empty; on the brow o' the sea
Stand racks of people, and they cry—a sail.

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.
2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy;
[Guns heard.]

Our friends, at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth,
And give us truth who 'tis that is arriv'd.

2 Gent. I shall. [Exit.]

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd?
Cas. Most fortunately: he hath schiev'd a maid
That paragon description, and wild fame;
One that excels the quinks of blazoning pens,¹⁰
And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.¹¹—How now? who has put in?

line alludes to the star Arctophylax, which literally signifies the guard of the bear. The 4to. 1622 reads 'ever-fired pole.'

6 The old copy reads 'a Veronese;' whether this signified a ship fitted out by the people of Verona, who were tributary to the Venetian republic, or designated some particular kind of vessel, is not yet fully established. But as Veronese has not hitherto been met with elsewhere, the former is most probably the true explanation.

7 A full soldier is a complete one. See Act I. Sc. 1, 8 i. e. of allowed and approved expertness.

9 The meaning seems to be, 'Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death, by excess of apprehension, stand in confidence of being cured.' A parallel expression occurs in Lear:—

'This rest might yet have balm'd his broken senses,
Which if convenience will not allow
Stand in hard cure.'

10 Thus in Shakespeare's 103d Sonnet:—
'—a face
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.'

11 This is the reading of the quartos: the folio has:
'And in the essential vesture of creation
Do's tyre the Ingeniuer.'

By the essential vesture of creation the poet means her outward form, which he in another place calls 'the muddy vesture of decay.' If the reading of the folio be adopted, the meaning would be this: She is one who excels all description, and in real beauty, or outward form, goes beyond the power of the inventive pencil of the artist.—Flecko, in his discourse on the English Stage, 1664, speaking of painting, mentions 'the stupendous works of your great ingeniars.' And Ben Jonson, in his Sejanus, Act iv. Sc. 4:—

'No, Silius, we are no good ingeniars,
We want the fine arts.'

An ingeniur or ingeniuer undoubtedly means an artist or painter; and is perhaps only another form of ingit, neer anciently used for any kind of artist or artificer

Re-enter second Gentleman.

2 Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

Cas. He has had most favourable and happy speed:

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—
Traitors ensteep'd¹ to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal² natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's captain,

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago;
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts,
A se'nnight's speed.—Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath;
That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,
Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort!—O, behold,

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore!³
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees:—
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Enwheel thee round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.
What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arriv'd; nor know I aught
But that he's well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I fear;—How lost you company?

Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail.

[Cry within, A sail, a sail! Then guns heard.
2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel;
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.⁴—

[Exit Gentleman.

Good ancient, you are welcome;—Welcome, mistress:—

[To EMILIA.

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners; 'tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

[Kissing her.

Iago. Sir, would she show you so much of her lips
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You'd have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;
I find it still, when I have list to sleep:
Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on; you are pictures out of doors,
Bells in your parlours, wild cats in your kitchens,

1 'Traitors ensteeped' are merely traitors concealed under the water.

2 Mortal is deadly, destructive.

3 'The riches of the ship is come on shore.' Shakspeare uses riches as a singular in his eighty-seventh Sonnet:—

'And for that riches, where is my deserving?'

4 The first quarto reads, 'So speaks this voice.'

5 That is, When you have a mind to do injuries, you put on an air of sanctity. In Puttenham's Art of Poesie, 1589, we have almost the same thoughts:—'We limit the comely parts of a woman to consist in four points; that is, to be a shrew in the kitchen, a saint in the church, an angel at board, and an ape in the bed; as the chronicle reports by mistress Shore, paramour to King Edward the Fourth.' There is something similar in Middleton's Blurt Master Constable, 1603; and it is alluded to in the Miseries of Inforc'd Marriage, 1607.

6 i. e. censorious.

7 A similar thought occurs in The Puritan:—'The excuse stuck upon my tongue like ship-pitch upon a mariner's gown.'

8 The quarto reads—hit.

9 The hint for this question, and the metrical reply of Saints in your injuries,⁵ devils being offended, Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

Des. O, lie upon thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk;
You rise to play, and go to bed to work.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago.

No, let me not.

Des. What would'st thou write of me, if thou should'st praise me?

Iago. O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;

For I am nothing, if not critical.⁶

Des. Come on, assay;—There's one gone to the harbour?

Iago. Ay, madam.

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile

The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.—

Come, how would'st thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention
Comes from my pate, as birdlime does from frize,⁷
It plucks out brains and all: But my muse labours,
And thus she is deliver'd.

If she be fair and wise,—fairness, and wit,

The one's for use, the other useth it.

Des. Wellprais'd! How if she be black and witty?

Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,

She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.⁸

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair,
For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes, to make fools laugh i' the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish?

Iago. There's none so foul, and foolish thereunto,
But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.

Des. O, heavy ignorance!—thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed!⁹ one, that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?¹⁰

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud;

Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;

Never lack'd gold, and yet went never gay;

Fled from her wish, and yet said,—now I may;

She that, being anger'd, her revenge being nigh,

Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly:

She, that in wisdom never was so frail,

To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail;¹¹

She that could think, and ne'er disclose her mind,

See suitors following, and not look behind;

She was a wight,—if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what?

Iago. To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer.¹²

Des. O, most lame and impotent conclusion!—
Do not learn of him, Emilia; though he be thy husband.—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal¹³ counsellor?

Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may relish him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside.] He takes her by the palm: Ay, well said, whisper: with as little a web as this, will
I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon

Iago, is taken from a strange pamphlet, called Choice, Chance, and Change, or Conceits in their Colours, 1606.

10 The sense is this—one that was so conscious of her own merit, and of the authority her character had with every one, that she durst call upon malice itself to vouch for her. This was some commendation. And the character only of clearest virtue; which could force malice, even against its nature, to do justice.—Warbur- ton. To put on is to provoke, to incite.

11 That is to exchange a delicacy for coarser fare.
See Queen Elizabeth's Household Book for the forty-third year of her reign:—'Item, the master cookes have to see all the sa'mons' tails, &c. p. 296.

12 i. e. 'to suckle children and keep the accounts of the household.' These expressions are only instances of the want of natural affection, and the predominance of a critical censoriousness in Iago, which he allows himself to be possessed of, where he says 'O! I am nothing, if not critical.'

13 Liberal is licentious

her, do; I will gyve¹ thee in thine own courtship. You say true; 'tis so indeed: if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantship, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in. Very good; well kissed! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed. Yet agsin your fingers to your lips? 'would, they were clyster-pipes for your sake!

[Trumpet.] The Moor, I know his trumpet.

Cas. 'Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter OTHELLO, and Attendants.

Oth. O, my fair warrior.²

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content,
To see you here before me. O, my soul's joy!
If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd death!
And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus-high; and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy;³ for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid,
But that our loves and comforts should increase,
Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!—
I cannot speak enough of this content,
It stops me here; it is too much of joy:
And this, and this, the greatest discords be,⁴

[Kissing her.

That e'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. O, you are well tun'd now!
But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,
As honest as I am. [Aside.

Oth. Come, let's to the castle.—
News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

How do your old acquaintance of this isle?—
Honey, you shall be well desir'd⁵ in Cyprus,
I have found great love amongst them. O, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion⁶ and I dote
In mine own comforts.—I pr'ythee, good Iago,
Go to the bay, and disembark my coffers:
Bring thou the master⁷ to the citadel;
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona,
Once more, well met at Cyprus.

[Exit OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour.
Come hither. If thou be'st valiant as (they say) base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me.
The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard:⁸—First, I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him! why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger—thus,⁹ and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies: And will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be,—again to inflammate it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite,— loveliness in favour; sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in:
Now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor;
very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted, (as it is a most pregnant and unforced position,) who stands so eminently in the degree of this fortune, as Cassio does? a knave very voluble, no further con-scionable, than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why, none; why, none: A slippery and subtle knave; a finder out of occasions; that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself: A devilish knave! besides, the knave is handsome, young; and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and green minds¹⁰ look after: A pestilent complete knave; and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she is full of most blessed condition.¹¹

Iago. Blessed fig's end! the wine she drinks is made of grapes: if she had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor; Blessed pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lechery, by his hand; an index,¹² and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts.
They met so near with their lips, that their breaths embraced together. Villanous thoughts, Roderi-go! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion: Pish!—But, sir, be you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice.
Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay't upon you: Cassio knows you not;—I'll not be far from you: Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting¹³ his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden¹⁴ in choler;
and, haply, with his truncheon may strike at you:
Provoke him, that he may: for, even out of that,
will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose

¹ To gyve is to fetter, to shackle. The first quarto reads—'I will catch you in your own courtesies.' It may be as well to observe that courtship is the same as courtesy, i. e. complimentary or courtly behaviour. To play the sir, is to show good breeding and gallantry.

² This phrase was introduced by our copiers of the French sonnetiers. Ronsard frequently calls his mistresses guerrieres; and Southern, his imitator, is not less prodigal of the same appellation. Thus in his fifth sonnet:—

'And my fair warrior, my light shines in thy fair eyes.'

³ So Cherea in The Eunuch of Terence, Act iii. Sc. 5:—

Proh Jupiter!

Nunc tempus profecto est, cum perpeti me possum in-terfici.

Ne vita aliqua hoc gaudium contamineat ægritudine.'

⁴ Thus in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion:—

'I pr'ythee chide, if I have done amiss,
But let my punishment be this and this.'

[Kissing the Moor.]
Marlowe's play was written before that of Shakspeare, who might possibly have acted in it.

⁵ i. e. much solicited by invitation. So in The Letters of the Paston Family, vol. i. p. 299:—'At the which wedding I was with myn hostes, and also desyryd by ye jentylman himselfe.'

⁶ Out of method, without any settled order of discourse.

⁷ The master is a distinct person from the pilot of a vessel, and has the principal care and command of the vessel under the captain, where there is a captain; and in chief where there is none. Dr. Johnson confounded the master with the pilot, and the poet himself seems to have done so. See the first line of Scene 2, Act iii.

⁸ That is, the place where the guard musters.

⁹ On thy mouth to stop it, while thou art listening to a wiser man.

¹⁰ Minds unripe, minds not yet fully formed.

¹¹ Qualities, disposition of mind.

¹² It has already been observed that indexes were formerly prefixed to books.

¹³ Throwing a slur upon his discipline. So in Trollus and Cressida, Act i. Sc. 3:—

'In taint of our best man.'

¹⁴ Sudden is precipitately violent. So Malcolm, describing Macbeth:—

'I grant him bloody—Sudden, malicious.'

qualification¹ shall come into no true taste again, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer² them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.]

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it; That she loves him, 'tis apt, and of great credit: The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not,—Is of a constant, loving, noble nature; And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona A most dear husband. Now I do love her too; Not out of absolute lust, (though, peradventure, I stand accountant for as great a sin,) But partly led to diet my revenge, For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Hath leap'd into my seat: the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards; And nothing can or shall content my soul, Till I am even³ with him, wife for wife; Or, failing so, yet that I put the Moor At least into a jealousy as strong That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,—If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace⁴ For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip; Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb,⁵ For I fear Cassio with my nightcap too; Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me, For making him egregiously an ass, And practising upon his peace and quiet, Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd; Knavery's plain face is never seen, till us'd.⁶

[Exit.]

SCENE II. A Street. Enter a Herald, with a Proclamation; People following.

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere⁷ perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addiction leads him; for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptials: So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices⁸ are open; and there is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five, till the bell hath told eleven. Heaven bless the Isle of Cyprus, and our noble general Othello!

[Exeunt.]

¹ Johnson has erroneously explained this. Qualification, in our old writers, signifies appeasement, pacification, assuagement of anger. 'To appease and qualify one that is angry; tranquillum facere ex irato.'—Baret.

² To advance them.

³ Thus the quarto 1622. The folio—till I am even³ with him: i. e. till I am on a level with him by retaliation.

⁴ 'If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace For his quick hunting, bear the putting on,' &c. This is the reading of the folio, which, though it has a plain and easy sense, would not do for the commentators, and the quarto of 1622 reading crush, they altered it to trash, signifying to impede, to keep back, a meaning the very converse of that required by the context; to say nothing of the wretched jingle of trash and trash; which Stevens is pleased to consider 'much in Shakspere's manner.' The fact is, to trace means neither more nor less than to follow, the appropriate hunting term; the old French tracer, tracher, trasser, and the Italian tracciare having the same meaning. Stevens is sadly put to it to explain how keeping Roderigo back and putting him on can quadruple, and all is doubt and perplexity. Bishop Hall, in the third satire of his fifth book, uses trace for to follow—

'Go on and thrive, my petty tyrant's pride,
Scorn thou to live, if others live beside;
And trace proud Castile, that aspires to be
In his old age a young fifth monarchy.'

SCENE III. A Hall in the Castle. Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night:

Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop, Not to outstrip discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do; But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye Will I look to't.

Oth. Iago is most honest. Michael, good night: To-morrow with our earliest, Let me have speech with you.—Come, my dear love,

The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue;

[To DESDEMONA.]

That profit's yet to come 'twixt me and you.—

Good night. [Exeunt OTH. DES. and Attend.]

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Welcome, Iago: We must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; 'tis not yet ten o'clock: Our general cast⁹ us thus early, for the love of his Desdemona; whom let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and she is sport for Jove.

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she is a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And, when she speaks, is it not an alarm to love?

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.¹⁰

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup of wine; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago; I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified¹¹ too, and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do't; but it dislikes me. [Exit CASSIO.]

⁵ 'In the rank garb,' which has puzzled Stevens and Malone, is merely 'In the right down, or straight forward fashion.' In As You Like It, we have 'the right butterwoman's rank to market.' And in King Lear, Cornwall says of Kent in disguise, that he 'doth affect a saucy roughness, and constrains the garb (i. e. assumes the fashion) quite from his nature.' Gower says of Fluellen, in King Henry V.—'You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel.' The folio reads—'In the right garb.'

⁶ 'An honest man acts upon a plan, and forecasts his designs; but a knave depends upon temporary and local opportunities, and never knows his own purpose, but at the time of execution.'—Johnson.

⁷ Mere is entire.

⁸ All rooms, or places in the castle, at which refreshments are prepared or served out.

⁹ i. e. dismissed us, threw us off, or rid himself of our company. The herald has just informed us that there was full liberty of feasting, &c. till eleven. So in The Witch, by Middleton—

'She cast off

My company betimes to-night, by tricks,' &c.

¹⁰ In this and the seven short speeches preceding, the decent character of Cassio is most powerfully contrasted with that of the licentious Iago.

¹¹ Silly mixed with water.

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drunk to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool,

Roderigo,
Whom love has turn'd almost the wrong side outward,

To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potations pottle deep; and he's to watch:
Three lads of Cyprus,—noble swelling spirits,
That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,¹
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards,

Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle:—But here they come:
It consequence do but approve my dream.²
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter CASSIO, with him MONTANO, and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse³ already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.⁴

Iago. Some wine, ho!

And let me the canakin clink, clink; [Sings.

And let me the canakin clink:

A soldier's a man;

A life's but a span;

Why, then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! [Wine brought in.

Cas. Fore heaven, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where (inneed) they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander,—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.

Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?⁵

Iago. Why, he drinks you with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.⁶

Iago. O, sweet England!

King Stephen was a worthy peer,

His breeches cost him but a crown,

He held them sixpence all too dear,

With that he call'd the tailor—lown.

He was a sight of high renown,

And thou art but of low degree:

'Tis pride that pulls the country down:

Then take thine auld cloak about thee.

Some wine, ho!

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again?

Cas. No; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that does those things.—Well,—Heaven's

¹ As quarrelsome as the discordia semina rerum; as quick in opposition as fire and water.—Johnson.

² Every scheme subsisting only in the imagination may be termed a dream.

³ See Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 2, note 8, p. 472.

⁴ If Montano was Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus (as we are told in the Personæ Dramatis) he is not very characteristically employed in the present scene, where he is tipping with people already flustered, and encouraging a subaltern officer, who commands a midnight guard, to drink to excess.— Stephens.

⁵ Thus the quarto 1622. The folio has—exquisite.
This accomplishment is likewise mentioned by Beaumont and Fletcher in The Captain:—

'Lod. Are the Englishmen

Such stubborn drinkers?

'Piso. — not a leak at sea

Can suck more liquor; you shall have their children Christen'd in mull'd sack, and at five years old

Able to knock a Dane down.'

Henry Peacham, in his Complait Gentleman, 1622, p.
193, has a section entitled 'Drinking the Plague of our above all; and there be souls that must be saved and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, or any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me; the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs.—Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business.
Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk; this is my ancient;—this is my right hand, and this is my left hand:—I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well, then; you must not think, then, that I am drunk. [Exit.

Mon. To the platform, masters: come, let's set the watch.

Iago. You see this fellow, that is gone before;—
He is a soldier, fit to stand by Cæsar
And give direction; and do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtue a just equinox,
The one as long as the other: 'tis pity of him.
I fear, the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep.
He'll watch the horologe a double set,⁷
If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well,

The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps, he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils; Is not this true?

Enter RODERIGO.

Iago. How now, Roderigo? [Aside.
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go.

[Exit RODERIGO.

Mon. And 'tis great pity, that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place, as his own second,
With one of an ingraft⁸ infirmity;
It were an honest action, to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But hark! what noise?
[Cry within—Help! help!

Re-enter CASSIO, driving in RODERIGO.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave!—teach me my duty!

I'll beat the knave into a twiggen⁹ bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue?

[Striking RODERIGO.

Mon. Nay, good lieutenant;

[Staying him.

I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, sir,
Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

English gentry, in which he says:—'Within these fiftie or threecore yeares it was a rare thing with us to see a drunken man, our nation carrying the name of the most sober and temperate of any other in the world.
But since we had to doe in the quarrell of the Netherlands, about the time of Sir John Norris his first being there, the custom of drinking and plegding healthes was brought over into England; wherein let the Dutch be their owne judges, if we equall them not; yea, I think, rather excell them.'

⁶ I. e. drink as much as you do. See *King Henry
IV. Part II. Act v. Sc. 2.*

⁷ If he have no drink, he'll keep awake while the clock strikes two rounds, or four and twenty hours.—
The word horologe is familiar to most of our ancient writers: Chaucer often uses it. So in the Devil's Charter, 1607:—

—My gracious lord,

By Seato's horologe 'tis struck eleven.'

⁸ Rooted, settled.

⁹ I. e. a wickered bottle, and so the quarto reads.

Men. Come, come, you're drunk.

Cas. Drunk!

[They fight.]

Iago. Away, I say! go out, and cry—a mutiny.

[Aside to Rod. who goes out.]

Nay, good lieutenant,—alas, gentlemen,—

Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—sir;—

Help, masters!—Here's a goodly watch, indeed!

[Bell rings.]

Who's that that rings the bell?—Diablo, ho!

The town will rise; God's will, lieutenant! hold;

You will be sham'd for ever.

Enter OTHELLO, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to the death—he dies.¹

Oth. Hold, for your lives.

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant, sir, Montano,—gentlemen,—

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?

Hold, hold! the general speaks to you; hold, for shame!

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth this?

Are we turn'd Turks; and to ourselves do that,
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?

For christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl:

He that stirs next to carve for his own rage,

Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.—

Silence that dreadful bell, it frights the isle

From her propriety.—What is the matter, masters?

Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving,

Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know;—friends all but now, even now,

In quarter,² and in terms like bride and groom

Devesting them for bed: and then, but now,

(As if some planet had unwitting men,)

Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast,

In opposition bloody. I cannot speak

Any beginning to this peevish odds;

And 'would, in action glorious I had lost

These legs, that brought me to a part of it!

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?³

Cas. I pray you, pardon me, I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil;

The gravity and stillness of your youth

The world hath noted, and your name is great

In mouths of wisest censure; What's the matter,

That you unlance your reputation thus,

And spend your rich opinion,⁴ for the name

Of a night brawler? give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger;

Your officer, Iago, can inform you—

While I spare speech, which something now offends me:—

Of all that I do know: nor know I aught

By me that's said or done amiss this night;

Unless self-charity⁵ be sometime a vice;

And to defend ourselves it be a sin,

When violence assails us.

1 The first quarto omits the words—he dies, and has zounds at the commencement of the line. Montano may be supposed to say—he dies, i. e. he shall die, offering to renew the fight upon finding himself severely hurt. Othello, in the very next speech, says:—‘He dies upon his motion.’

2 i. e. on our station. ‘This short note might have saved the long disquisitions of Ritson, Henley, and Malone, about the precise meaning of a word which, in the military language of the present day at least, seems to have no very precise meaning. The meaning given above seems the leading signification, for the principal camp guard of a regiment is called the quarter guard; but a regiment in quarters has no such guard. I wonder that Mr. Steevens, who had been in the militia, did not exercise his judgment on this passage.’—Pye.

3 i. e. you have thus forgot yourself.

4 Throw away and squander your valuable character. Opinion for reputation or character occurs in other places.

5 Care of one's self

Oth. Now, by heaven,

My blood begins my safer guides to rule;

And passion, having my best judgment collid,

Assays to lead the way: If I once stir,

Or do but lift this arm, the best of you

Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on;

And he that is approv'd⁶ in this offence,

Though he had twin'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall lose me.—What! in a town of war,

Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,

To manage private and domestic quarrel,

In night, and on the court of guard and safety!⁷

'Tis monstrous.⁸—Iago, who began it?

Mon. If partially affi'd,⁹ or leagu'd in office,

Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,

Thou art no soldier.

Iago.

Touch me not so near:

I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth

Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;

Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth

Shall nothing wrong him.—Thus it is, general.

Montano and myself being in speech,

There comes a fellow, crying out for help;

And Cassio following with determin'd sword,¹¹

To execute upon him: Sir, this gentleman

Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause;

Myself the crying fellow did pursue,

Lest, by his clamour, (as it so fell out,)

The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,

Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather.

For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,

And Cassio high in oath; which, till to-night,

I ne'er might say before: when I came back,

(For this was brief,) I found them close together,

At blow, and thrust; even as again they were,

When you yourself did part them.

More of this matter can I not report:—

But men are men; the best sometimes forget:—

Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,—

As men in rage strike those that wish them best,—

Yet, surely, Cassio, I believe, receiv'd,

From him that fled, some strange indignity,

Which patience could not pass.

Oth.

I know, Iago

Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter

Making it light to Cassio:—Cassio, I love thee;

But never more be officer of mine.—

Enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up;—

I'll make thee an example.

Des.

What's the matter, dear?

Oth. All's well now, sweeting; Come away to bed.

Sir, for your hurts,

Myself will be your surgeon;—Lead him off.¹²

[To MONTANO, who is led off.]

Iago, look with care about the town;

And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.—

6 Collid is blackened, as with smut or coal, and figuratively means here obscured, darkened.

7 Convicted by proof.

8 The old copies read:—

‘In night, and on the court and guard of safety.’

Malone made the necessary transposition, which he justifies by irrefragable proof; but Steevens obstinately opposed the emendation, and retained the old mumpkin in the text out of a spirit of contradiction!

9 Monstrous is here used as a trisyllable, as it is again in Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 6.

10 Affined is ‘bound by proximity of relationship,’ but here it means ‘related by nearness of office.’ In the first scene it is used in the first of these senses:—

‘If I, in any just term, am affi’d

To love the Moor.’

11 The old copy reads:—

‘And Cassio following him with determin’d sword.’ The word him seems to have crept in from the compositor’s eye glancing on the word in the next line.

12 Malone thinks that the words—‘Lead him off’ were originally a marginal stage direction, as it was common to express them in imperative terms:—Play music—Ring the bell—Lead him off; &c.

Come, Desdemona; 'tis the soldiers' life,
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife.

[Exeunt all but IAGO and CASSIO.]

Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant?

Cas. Ay, past all surgery.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!

Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part, sir, of myself, and what remains is bestial.—My reputation, Iago, my reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more offence in that, than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: You have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again: You are but now cast in his mood; a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an imperious lion: sue to him again, and he's yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to be despised, than to deceive so good a commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabble? swagger? swear? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow?—O, thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil!

Iago. What was he that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is it possible?

Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.—O, that men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, revel, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: How came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleased the devil drunkenness, to give place to the devil, wrath: one unperfectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself.

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moralist: As the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is, mend it for your own good.

Cas. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O, strange!—Every inordinate cup is unblessed, and the ingredient is a devil.

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used; exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think, you think I love you.

Cas. I have well approved it sir,—I drunk!

Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunk at some time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general;—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and denotement³ of her parts and graces:—confess yourself freely to her; importune her; she'll help to put you in your place again; she is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, that she holds it a vice in her goodness, not to do more than she is requested: This broken joint⁴ between you and her husband, entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay⁵ worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

Cas. You advise me well.

Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love, and honest kindness.

Cas. I think it freely; and sometimes in the morning, I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my fortunes, if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must to the watch.

Cas. Good night, honest Iago.

Iago. And what's he, then, that says,—I play the villain?

When this advice is free,⁶ I give, and honest, Probal to thinking, and (indeed) the course To win the Moor again? For, 'tis most easy The inclining Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit: she's fram'd as fruitful⁸ As the free elements. And then for her To win the Moor,—were't to renounce his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,— His soul is so enfetter'd to her love, That she may make, unmake, do what she list, Even as her appetite shall play the god With his weak function. How am I then a villain, To counsel Cassio to this parallel course,⁹ Directly to his good? Divinity of hell! When devils will their blackest sins put on, They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,¹⁰ As I do now: For while this honest fool Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes, And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor, I'll pour this pestilence¹¹ into his ear,— That she repeals¹² him for her body's lust; And, by how much she strives to do him good, She shall undo her credit with the Moor. So will I turn her virtue into pitch; And out of her own goodness make the net, That shall enmesh them all.—How now, Roderigo?

Enter RODERIGO.

Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry. My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceedingly well cudgelled; and, I think, the issue will be—I shall have so much experience for my pains: and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they, that have not patience! What wound did ever heal but by degrees?

Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft?

And wit depends on dilatory time.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee; And thou, by that small hurt, hath cashier'd Cassio; Though other things grow fair against the sun, Yet fruits, that blossom first, will first be ripe:¹³ Content thyself awhile.—By the mass,¹⁴ 'tis morning;

Pleasure, and action, make the hours seem short.— Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:

1 Thrown off, dismissed in his anger.
2 I. e. talk idly, utter all you know. From Drunk, &c. to shadow, inclusively, is wanting in the quarto 1622.

3 The old copies read—devotement, an error arising from a single letter being turned upside down. Theobald made the correction.

4 Thus the folio. The quarto 1622 reads—this brawl.

5 Bet or wager.

6 I. e. liberal. Such as honest openness or frank good will would give. There may be such a contraction of the word probable as that in the next line, but it has not yet been met with elsewhere. Churchyard has many abbreviations equally violent.

7 Inclining here signifies compliant.

8 Corresponding to benigna. Liberal, bountiful as the elements, out of which all things were produced.

9 Parallel course for course level or even with his design.

10 When devils mean to instigate men to commit the most atrocious crimes, they prompt or tempt at first with heavenly shows, &c.

11 Pestilence for poison.

12 I. e. recalls him, from the Fr. rappeler.

13 The blossoming or fair appearance of things, to which Iago alludes, is the removal of Cassio. As their plan had already blossomed, so there was good ground for expecting that the fruits of it would soon be ripe.

14 The folio reads—In troth, an alteration made in the play-house copy by the interference of the master of the revels.

Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter :
Nay, get thee gone. [Exit ROD.] Two things are to be done,—

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress ;
I'll set her on :

Myself, the while, to draw¹ the Moor apart,
And bring him jump² when he may Cassio find
Soliciting his wife ; Ay, that's the way ;
Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Before the Castle. Enter CASSIO and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here, I will content your pains, Something that's brief; and bid—good morrow,
general.³ [Music.]

Enter Clown.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instruments been at Naples, that they speak i' the nose thus ?⁴

1 Mus. How, sir, how !

Clo. Are these, I pray you, called wind instruments ?

1 Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clo. O, thereby hangs a tail,

1 Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir ?

Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you ; and the general so likes your music, that he desires you of all loves,⁵ to make no more noise with it.

1 Mus. Well, sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again : but, as they say, to hear music,
the general does not greatly care.

1 Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away : Go ; vanish into air ; away.

[Exeunt Musicians.]

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend ?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend ; I hear
you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, keep up thy quillet.⁶ There's a poor piece of gold for thee : if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech : Wilt thou do this ?

Clo. She is stirring, sir ; if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her. [Exit.]

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Do, good my friend.—In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then ?

Cas. Why, no ; the day had broke
Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife : My suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
Procure me some access.

Iago. I'll send her to you presently ;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. [Exit.]

1 Some modern editions read—'Myself the while will draw.' But the old copies are undoubtedly right. An imperfect sentence was intended. Iago is ruminating upon his plan.

2 I. e. just at the time. So in Hamlet :—

'Thus twice before, and jump at this dead hour.'

3 It was usual for friends to serenade a new married couple on the morning after the celebration of the marriage, or to greet them with a morning song to bid them good-morrow. See Romeo and Juliet, Act iii. Sc. 5. Ritson's note about the vaite is nothing to the purpose.

4 So in The Merchant of Venice :—'The bagpipe sings i' the nose.' Rabelais somewhere speaks of 'a blow over the nose with a Naples cowl-staff.' The allusion is obvious.

5 I. e. for love's sake. We have this adjuration again in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

6 See Hamlet, Act v. Sc. i. p. 506. note 8.

7 In consequence of this line a doubt has been entertained concerning the country of Iago. Cassio was undoubtedly a Florentine, as appears by the first scene of the play, where he is expressly called one. That Iago

Cas. I humbly thank you for't. I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.'

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant : I am sorry
For your displeasure ;⁸ but all will soon be well.
The general, and his wife, are talking of it ;
And she speaks for you stoutly : The Moor replies,
That he you hurt, is of great fame in Cyprus,
And great affinity ; and that, in wholesome wisdom,
He might not but refuse you : but, he protests, he loves you ;

And needs no other suitor, but his likings,
To take the saf'st occasion by the front,⁹
To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. 'Pray you, come in ;
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you.¹⁰
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. *A Room in the Castle. Enter
OTHELLO, IAGO, and Gentlemen.*

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot ;
And, by him, do my duties to the state :¹¹
That done, I will be walking on the works,
Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.
Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see't ?
Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Before the Castle. Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.

Emil. Good madam, do ; I know, it grieves my husband,

As if the case¹² were his.

Des. O, that's an honest fellow.—Do not doubt,
Cassio,

But I will have my lord and you again
As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam,
Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. O, sir,¹³ I thank you : You do love my lord :
You have known him long ; and be you well
assur'd,

He shall in strangeness stand no further off
Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but lady,
That policy may either last so long,¹⁴
Or feed upon such nice and watery diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstance,
That, I being absent, and my place supplied,
My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that ; before Emilia here,
I give thee warrant of thy place : assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it was a Venetian is proved by a speech in the third scene of this act, and by what he says in the fifth act, after having stabbed Roderigo :—

'Iago. Alas, my dear friend and countryman Roderigo !

'Gra. What, of Venice ?

'Iago. Yes.'

All that Cassio means to say in the present passage is, I never experienced more honesty and kindness even in one of my own countrymen.

8 I. e. the displeasure you have incurred from Othello.

9 This line is wanting in the folio.

10 This speech is omitted in the first quarto.

11 Thus the quarto 1622. Folio—'to the senate.'

12 Folio reads—'As if the cause were his.'

13 Thus the quarto of 1622. The folio reads—'I know't. I thank you.'

14 'He may either of himself think it politic to keep me out of office so long, or he may be satisfied with such slight reasons, or so many accidents may make him think my readmission at that time improper, that I may be quite forgotten.'—Johnson.

To the last article : my lord shall never rest ;
I'll watch him tame,¹ and talk him out of patience ;
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift ;
I'll intermingle every thing he does
With Cassio's suit : Therefore be merry, Cassio ;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away.

Enter OTHELLO, and IAGO, at a distance.

Emil. Madam, here comes
My lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.

Des. Why, stay,
And hear me speak.

Cas. Madam, not now ; I am very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.

Des. Well, well,
Do your discretion. [Exit CASSIO.]

Iago. Ha ! I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say ?

Iago. Nothing, my lord : or if—I know not what.

Oth. Was not that Cassio, parted from my wife ?

Iago. Cassio, my lord ? No, sure, I cannot think it,

That he would steal away so guiltilylike,
Seeing you coming.

Oth. I do believe 'twas he.

Des. How now, my lord ?

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is't, you mean ?

Des. Why, your lieutenant Cassio. Good my
lord,

If I have any grace, or power to move you,

His present reconciliation² take ;

For, if he be not one that truly loves you,

That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,³

I have no judgment in an honest face :

I pr'ythee call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now ?

Des. Ay, sooth ; so humbled,

That he hath left part of his grief with me ;

I suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona ; some other time.

Des. But shall't be shortly ?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall't be to-night at supper ?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner, then ?

Oth. I shall not dine at home ;

I meet the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why then, to-morrow night ; or Tuesday morn ;

Or Tuesday noon, or night ; or Wednesday morn ;—

I pray thee, name the time ; but let it not Exceed three days : in faith, he's penitent ;

And yet his trespass, in our common reason,

(Save that, they say, the wars must make examples

Out of their best,⁴) is not almost a fault

To incur a private check : When shall he come ?

¹ Hawks and other birds are tamed by keeping them from sleep. To this Shakespeare alludes.—So in Cartwright's Lady Errant :—

‘ We'll keep you
As they do hawks, watching until you leave
Your wildness.’

And in Davenant's Just Italian :—

‘ They've watch'd my hardy violence so tame.’

² i. e. ‘take his present atonement,’ or submission.
The words were formerly synonymous.

³ Cunning here signifies knowledge, the ancient sense of the word.

⁴ The severity of military discipline must not spare the best men of the army, when their punishment may afford a wholesome example.

⁵ So hesitating, in such doubtful suspense. So in Lyly, Euphues, 1590.—‘ Neither stand in a mamering whether it be best to depart or not.’ The quarto 1622 reads—muttering.

⁶ See Act I. Sc. 2. ⁷ i. e. of weight.

⁸ ‘The meaning of the word wretch is not generally understood. It is now in some parts of England a term

Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul,
What you could ask me, that I should deny,
Or stand so *mammering*⁵ on. What Michael
Cassio,

That came a wooing with you,⁶ and so many a time,
When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part ; to have so much to do
To bring him in ! Trust me, I could do much,—

Oth. Pr'ythee, no more : let him come when he will ;

I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a boon ;
'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm ;
Or sue to you to do peculiar profit
To your own person : Nay, when I have a suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poize⁷ and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing ;
Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

Des. Shall I deny you ? no : Farewell, my lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona : I will come to thee straight.

Des. Emilia, come :—Be it as your fancies teach
you ;

Whate'er you be, I am obedient.

[Exit with EMILIA.]

Oth. Excellent wretch !⁸ Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee ! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.⁹

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago ?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,

Know of your love ?

Oth. He did, from first to last : Why dost thou ask ?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought ;

No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago ?

Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes ; and went between us very oft.

Iago. Indeed ?

Oth. Indeed ! ay, indeed :—Discern'st thou aught in that ?

Is he not honest ?

Iago. Honest, my lord ?

Oth. Ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think ?

Iago. Think, my lord ?

Oth. Think my lord !

By heaven, he echoes me,

As if there were some monster in his thought

Too hideous to be shown.—Thou dost mean something :

I heard thee say but now—Thou lik'st not that,
When Cassio left my wife ; What did'st not like ?

And, when I told thee—he was of my counsel

In my whole course of wooing, thou cry'st, Indeed ?

of the fondest and softest tenderness. It expresses the utmost degree of amiableness, joined with an idea which perhaps all tenderness includes, of feebleness, softness, and want of protection. Othello, considering Desdemona as excelling in beauty and virtue, soft and timorous by her sex, and by her situation absolutely in his power, calls her Excellent wretch ! It may be expressed, ‘Dear, harmless, helpless excellence.’—Johnson. Sir W. Davenant, in his Cruel Brother, uses the word twice with the same meaning :—‘Excellent wretch ! with a timorous modesty she stifteth up her utterance.’

⁹ I think with Malone, that Othello is meant to say, ‘Ere I cease to love thee, the world itself shall be reduced to its primitive chaos. ‘So in Venus and Adonis :—

‘For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And beauty dead, black Chaos comes again.’

Shakspeare's meaning is more fully expressed in The Winter's Tale :—

‘It cannot fail but by
The violation of my faith,—and then
Let nature crush the sides of the earth together
And mar the seeds within’

And didst contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit : If thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost :
And,—for I know thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,—

Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more :
For such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom ; but, in a man that's just,
They are close denotements,¹ working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,—
I dare be sworn, I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem ;
Or, those that be not, 'would, they might seem none!²

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this :

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate ; and give thy worst of thoughts

The worst of words.

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me ;
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.³
Utter my thoughts ? Why, say, they are vile and false,—

As where's that palace, whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not ?⁴ who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets,⁵ and law-days, and in session sit
With meditations lawful ?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago,
If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,—
Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess,

1 Thus the earliest quarto. The first folio reads—
'close dilations.' Which Johnson says was intended for 'cold delations, i. e. occult and secret accusations, working involuntary from the heart. The second folio reads—'cold dilations,' which Warburton explains
'cold, keeping back a secret,' which men of phlegmatic constitutions, whose arts are not swayed or governed by their passions, we find can do: while more sanguine tempers reveal themselves at once, and without reserve.' Upon says dilations comes from the Latin dilationes, delayings, pauses.

2 I believe the meaning is, 'would they might no longer seem or bear the shape of men.'—Johnson.

3 'I am not bound to do that which even slaves are not bound to do.' So in Cymbeline:—

— O, Pisanio,
Every good servant does not all commands,
No bond but to do just ones.'

4 — No perfection is so absolute
That some impurity doth not pollute.'

Rape of Lucrece.

5 'Who has so virtuous a breast that some impure conceptions and uncharitable surmises will not sometimes enter into it; hold a session there, as in a regular court, and "bench by the side" of authorised and lawful thoughts.' In the poet's thirtieth sonnet we find the same imagery:—

'When to the sessions of sweet silent thoughts
I summon up remembrance of things past.'

A leaf is also called a law day. 'This court, in whose manor soever kept, was accounted the king's court, and commonly held every half year,' it was a meeting of the hundred 'to certify the king of the good manners and government of the inhabitants,' &c.

6 I. e. conjectures. Thus the quarto 1622. The folio reads:

— and of my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not, that your wisdom
From one that so imperfectly conceals,
Would take no notice.'

7 The sacred writings were perhaps in the poet's thoughts: 'A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour than silver and gold.'— Proverbs, xxii. 1.

As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses : and, oft, my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not,—I entreat you, then,
From one that so imperfectly conceals,⁶
You'd take no notice ? nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance :
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean ?

Iago. Good name, in man, and woman, dear my
lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls :
Who steals my purse, steals trash ;⁷ 'tis something,
nothing :

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands ;⁸

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thought.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand ;
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha !

Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy ;
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth make⁹
The meat it feeds on : That cuckold lives in bliss,
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger ;
But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er,
Who dotes, yet doubts ; suspects, yet strongly loves !

Oth. O, misery !

Iago. Poor, and content, is rich and rich enough ;
But riches, fineless,¹⁰ is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor :—
Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy !

Oth. Why ! why is this ?

Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions ? No : to be once in doubt,
Is—once to be resolv'd : Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufficate¹¹ and blown surmises,

8 'Nunc ager Umbreni sub nomine nuper Ofelli
Dicitur, erit nulli proprius ; sed cedit in usum
Nunc mihi, nunc alii.' Horat. Sat. lib. ii. 2.
So in Camden's Remaines, 1605, p. 107:—

'Nunc mea, mox huius, sed postea nescio cuius.'
9 The old copy reads mock. The emendation is Hamer's. Steevens attempted to justify the old reading ; but his arguments are not convincing ; and the slight alteration of the text renders it much more clear, elegant, and poetical, and has been so well defended by Malone and others, that I have not hesitated to adopt it.
The following passages have been adduced in confirmation of Hamer's reading. At the end of the third Act, Desdemona remarks on Othello's jealousy:—

'Alas the day ! I never gave him cause.'
To which Emilia replies:—
'But jealous fools will not be answer'd so,
They are not jealous ever for the cause,
But jealous, for they are jealous: 'tis a monster
Begot upon itself, born on itself.'

10 I. e. endless, unbounded. Warburton observes that this is finely expressed—winter producing no fruits.

11 No instance of this word has elsewhere occurred.
It appears to me to be intended to convey the meaning of whispered, or made out of breath. Sufflation is interpreted by Phillips, 'a puffing up, a making to swell with blowing.' In Plautus we have, 'Sufflati nescio quid uxore ;' which Cooper renders, 'He hath whispered somewhat in his wives ears, whatsoever it be.' He also translates 'Rumoris nescio quid affla- rat, a certain brute or rumour come to my hearing.'
Though I do not agree with the following explanation,
I think it right to lay it before the reader:—'It seems to me, (says Mr. Todd,) that all the critics have overlooked the meaning of the passage. Exsufficates may be traced to the low Latin exsufflare, to spit down upon, an ancient form of exorcising ; and, figuratively, to spit out in abhorrence or contempt. See Du Cange, in
v. exsufflare. Exsufficate may thus signify contem- ptible; and Othello may be supposed to mean, that he would not change the noble designs, that then employed his thoughts, for contemptible and despicable surmises.'
Johnson's Dict. in v. Exsufflate.

Matching thy inference.¹ 'Tis not to make me jealous,

To say—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company, Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well; Where virtue is, these are more virtuous;² Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt; For she had eyes, and chose me: No, Iago; I'll see, before I doubt; when I doubt, prove; And, on the proof, there is no more but this,—Away at once with love, or jealousy.

Iago. I am glad of this, for now I shall have reason To show the love and duty that I bear you With franker spirit: therefore, as I am bound, Receive it from me:—I speak not yet of proof. Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio; Wear your eye—thus, not jealous, nor secure: I would not have your free and noble nature, Out of self-bounty,³ be abus'd; look to 't: I know our country disposition well; In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience

Is—not to leave undone, but keep unknown.⁴

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying you; And, when she seem'd to shake, and fear your looks, She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then; She that, so young, could give out such a seeming, To seal her father's eyes up, close as oak,⁵—He thought, 'twas witchcraft:—But I am much to blame;

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon, For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see, this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me, I fear it has. I hope you will consider, what is spoke Comes from my love;—But I do see you are mov'd:—

I am to pray you not to strain my speech To grosser issues,⁶ nor to larger reach, Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord, My speech should fall into such vile success⁷

1 i. e. such as you have mentioned in describing the torments of jealousy.

2 A passage in Ali's Well that Ends Well is perhaps the best comment on the sentiments of Othello:—"I have those good hopes of her education promises: his disposition she inherits; which makes fair gifts fairer." Gratior a pulchro veniens et corpore virtus.

3 Self bounty for inherent generosity.

4 This and the following argument of Iago ought to be deeply impressed on every reader. Deceit and falsehood, whatever conveniences they may for a time promise or produce, are in the sum of life obstacles to happiness. Those who profit by the cheat, distrust the deceiver, and the act by which kindness is sought puts an end to confidence.—The same objection may be made with a lower degree of strength against the imprudent generosity of disproportionate marriages. When the first heat of passion is over, it is easily succeeded by suspicion, that the same violence of inclination, which caused one irregularity, may stimulate to another; and those who have shown that their passions are too powerful for their prudence, will, with very slight appearances against them, be censured, as not very likely to restrain them by their virtue.—Johnson.

5 An expression from falconry: to seal a hawk is to sew up his eyelids. Close as oak means as close as the grain of oak.

6 Issues for conclusions.

7 Success here means consequence or event; as success, in Italian. So in Sidney's Arcadia, p. 39, ed. 1613:—"Straight my heart misgave me some evil success." And in The Palace of Pleasure:—"Fearing lest their case would sort to some pitiful success."

8 Will for inclination or desire. A rank will is a lustful inclination.

9 'You shall discover whether he thinks his best means, his most powerful interest, is by the solicitation of your lady.'

As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend:—

My lord, I see you are mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd:— I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to think so!

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,—

Iago. Ay, there's the point:—As,—to be bold with you,—

Not to affect many proposed matches, Of her own clime, complexion, and degree; Whereto, we see, in all things nature tends: Foh! one may smell, in such, a will⁸ most rank, Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.—

But pardon me; I do not, in position,

Distinctly speak of her: though I may fear,

Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,

May fall to match you with her country forms,

And (happily) repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;

Set on thy wife to observe: Leave me, Iago.

Iago. My lord, I take my leave. [Going.]

Oth. Why did I marry?—This honest creature, doubtless,

Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. My lord, I would, I might entreat your honour

To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:

And though it be fit that Cassio have his place,

(For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,) Yet, if you please to hold him off a while,

You shall by that perceive him and his means:⁹

Note, if your lady strain his entertainment!¹⁰

With any strong or vehement importunity;

Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,

Let me be thought too busy in my fears,

(As worthy cause I have, to fear—I am,) And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.¹¹

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit.]

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,

And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit!¹²

Of human dealings: If I do prove her haggard,¹³

Though that her jesses!¹⁴ were my dear heart-strings,

I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,

To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black;

And have not those soft parts of conversation

That chamberers have:¹⁵—Or, for I am declin'd

10 i. e. press hard his readmission to his pay and office. Entertainment was the military term for the admission of soldiers.

11 Do not distrust my ability to contain my passion.

12 Learned for experienced. The construction is,

'He knows with an experienced spirit all qualities of human dealings.'

13 Haggard is wild, and therefore libertine. A haggard falcon was a wild hawk that had preyed for herself long before she was taken; sometimes also called a ramage falcon. From a passage in The White Devil, or Vittoria Corombona, 1612, it appears that haggard was a term of reproach, sometimes applied to a scanton:—'Is this your perch, you haggard? fly to the stew's.' So in Shakerley Marmion's Holland's Leaguer, 1633:

'Before these courtiers lick their lips at her,

I'll trust a wanton haggard in the wind.'

Again:—

'For she is ticklish as any haggard,

And quickly lost.'

14 Jesses are short straps of leather tied about the foot of a hawk, by which she is held on the fist.—'The falconers always let fly the hawk against the wind; if she flies with the wind behind her, she seldom returns. If therefore a hawk was for any reason to be dismissed, she was let down the wind, and from that time shifted for herself and preyed at fortune.' This was told to Dr. Johnson by Mr. Clark. So in the Spanish Gipsie, 1653:

—That young lannerd (i. e. hawk)

Whom you have such a mind to; if you can whistle her

To come to fist, make trial, play the young falconer.'

15 Men of intrigue. Chambering and wantonness are mentioned together in the Scriptures.

Into the vale of years;—yet that's not much;—
She's gone; I am abus'd; and my relief
Must be to loathe her. O, curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love,
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great ones;
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death;
Even then this forked plague¹ is fated to us,
When we do quicken.² Desdemona comes:

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!—
I'll not believe it.

Des. How now, my dear Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous³ islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why is your speech so faint? are you not well?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. 'Faith, that's with watching; 'twill away
again:

Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin⁴ is too little;

[He puts the Handkerchief from him, and it drops.
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exit OTH. and DES.

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steal it: but she so loves the token,
(For he conjur'd her, she would ever keep it,)
That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kiss, and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,⁵
And give 't Iago:
What he'll do with it, heaven knows, not I;
I nothing, but to please his fantasy.

Enter IAGO.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

Iago. A thing for me?—it is a common thing.

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

1 One of Sir John Harington's Epigrams will illustrate this forked plague:—

'Actæon guiltless unawares espying
Naked Diana bathing in her bowre
Was plagued with horns; his dogs did him devour;
Wherefore take heed, ye that are curious, prying,
With some such forked plague you be not smitten,
And in your foreheads see your faults be written.'

2 i. e. when we begin to live.

3 'The generous islanders' are the islanders of rank, distinction; generosi, Lat. This explanation however (as Stevens observes) may be too particular; for generous also signified valiant, of a brave spirit.

4 In the north of England this term for a handkerchief is still used. The word occurs in Macbeth, Julius Caesar, and other of these plays.

5 That is, copied. Her first thoughts are to have a copy made of it for her husband, and restore the original to Desdemona; but the sudden coming in of Iago, in a early humour, makes her alter her resolution, to please him. The same phrase afterwards occurs between Cassio and Bianca, in Sc. iv.

'This scheme of getting the work of this valued handkerchief copied, and restoring the original to Desdemona, was probably introduced by the poet to render Emilia less unamiable. It is remarkable that when she perceives Othello's fury on the loss of this token, though she is represented as affectionate to her mistress, she never attempts to relieve her from her distress; which she might easily have done by demanding the handkerchief from her husband, or divulging the story if he refused to restore it. But this would not have served the plot.—In Cinthio's Novel, while the artless Desdemona is caressing the child of Othello's ancient, the villain steals the handkerchief which hung at her girdle without the knowledge of his wife.'—Malone.

'This observation is very just; it is particularly striking in the representation; neither is the concluding

Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. What handkerchief?
Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stolen it from her?

Emil. No, 'faith; she let it drop by negligence;
And, to the advantage,⁶ I, being here, took't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emil. What will you do with it, that you have been so earnest

To have me filch it?

Iago. Why, what's that to you?

[Snatching it.

Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Give it me again: Poor lady! she'll run mad,
When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not you known of't; I have use for it.
Go, leave me.

[Exit EMILIA.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it: Trifles light as air,
Are, to the jealous, confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison:
Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons,
Which, at the first, are scarce found to distaste;
But, with a little act upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so:⁷—

Enter OTHELLO,

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandra-gora,⁸

Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'st⁹ yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me?

To me?

Iago. Why, how now, general? no more of that.

Oth. Avaunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the rack.—

I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd,

Than but to know't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord?

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?¹¹

I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:

I slept the next night well, was free and merry;

apology to be admitted, as there is no reason why Emilia should be present when Othello demands the handkerchief.—Pye.

6 That is, I am being opportunely here, took it up.

7 'Seem as if you knew nothing of the matter.' The folio reads, 'Be not unknown on't.'—This word occurs in the Life of Ariosto, subjoined to Sir John Harington's translation of the Orlando Furioso, p. 418, ed. 1607:—'some say he was married to her priville, but durst not be acknowne to it.' Again, in Cornelia, a tragedy, by Thomas Kyd, 1594:—

'Our friend's misfortune doth increase our own.'

Cic. But ours of others will not be acknowne.

8 Iago first ruminates on the qualities of the passion which he is labouring to excite; and then proceeds to comment on its effects. 'Jealousy, (says he,) with the smallest operation on the blood, flames out with all the violence of sulphur,' &c.

— I did say so;

Look where he comes!

i. e. I knew the least touch of such a passion would not permit the Moor a moment of repose:—I have just said that jealousy is a restless commotion of the mind; and look where Othello approaches, to confirm the propriety and justice of my observation.—Steevens.

9 The mandrake has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted an opiate of the most powerful kind. See Antony and Cleopatra, Act. I. Sc. 6.

10 i. e. possessedst.

11 A similar passage to this, and what follows it, is found in The Witch, by Middleton. In the same drama there is also a scene between Francisca and her brother Antonio, when she first excites his jealousy, which has several circumstances in common with the dialogue which passes between Iago and Othello on the same subject. It is more than probable that Middleton was the imitator.

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is rob'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know it, and he's not rob'd at all.
Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioneers¹ and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known: O, now, for ever,
Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!²
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,³
The royal banner; and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!⁴
And, O, you mortal engines, whose rude throats
The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

Iago. Is it possible!—My lord,—

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore;

Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof;

[Taking him by the Throat.]

Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,⁵
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog,
Than answer my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is it come to this?

Oth. Make me to see it; or (at the least) so prove it,

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on: or, wou upon thy life!

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse;⁶
On horror's head horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd,
For nothing canst thou to damnation add,
Greater than that.

Iago. O, grace, O, heaven, defend me!

Are you a man? have you a soul, or sense?
God be wi' you; take mine office.—O, wretched fool,
That liv'st to make thine honesty a vice!⁷
O, monstrous world! Take note, take note. O world,
To be direct and honest, is not safe.—

I thank you for this profit; and, from hence,
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay:—Thou should'st be honest.

Iago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool,
And loses that it works for.

Oth. By the world,

1 The vilest of the camp. Pioneers were generally degraded soldiers. According to the old ordinances of war, a soldier who lost any part of his arms by negligence or play, was to be dismissed with punishment, or to be made 'some abject pioneer.'

2 There are some points of resemblance between this speech and the following lines in a poem of George Peele's. 'A Farewell to the Famous and Fortunate Generals of our English Forces, Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake, 1589:—

'Change love for arms; gyrt to your blades, my boyes:
Your rests and muskets take, take helme and targe,
And let god Mars his trumpet make you mirth,
The roaring cannon, and the brazen trumpe,
The angry-sounding drum, the whistling fife,
The shriekes of men, the princelie courser's ney.'

3 In mentioning the fife joined to the drum, Shakespeare, as usual, paints from life; those instruments, accompanying each other, being used in his age by the English soldiery. The fife, however, as a martial instrument, was afterwards entirely discontinued among our troops for many years; but at length revived in the war before the last by the British guards under order of the duke of Cumberland, when they were encamped before Maestricht in 1747, and thence soon adopted into other English regiments of infantry. They took it from the allies with whom they served. This instrument accompanying the drum is of considerable antiquity in the European armies, particularly the German. In a curious picture, painted 1523, in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, representing the siege of Pavia by the French King, we see fifes and drums. In the diary of King Henry's siege of Bolloigne, 1544, (Rymer, Foed. xv. p. 33,) mention is made of drommes and vifflours marching at the head of the king's army. The drum and fife were also much used at shows and processions. At a stately masque on Shrove Tuesday,

I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not;
I'll have some proof: Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black
As mine own face.—If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it.—'Would, I were satisfied!

Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion:
I do repent me, that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied!

Oth. Would? nay, I will.

Iago. And may: but, how? how satisfied my lord?

Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on?
Behold her tupp'd?

Oth. Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: Damn them, then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own! What then? how then?
What shall I say? Where's satisfaction?
It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys
As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,
If imputation, and strong circumstances,—
Which lead directly to the door of truth,—
Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.

Oth. Give me a living⁹ reason she's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office:

But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far,— Prick'd to it by foolish honesty and love,—
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately;
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs;
One of this kind is Cassio:

In sleep I heard him say,—Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand,
Cry,—O, sweet creature! and then kiss me hard,
As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots,
That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg
Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then Cried,—Cursed fate, that gave thee to the Moor!

Oth. O, monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion;¹⁰
'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.¹¹

1510, in which Henry VIII. was an actor, Holinshed mentions the entry of 'a drum and fife, apparelled in white damaske and grene bonnettes'; and at the Inner Temple celebration of Christmas (described by Leigh in his Accidence of Armory, 1576,) 'We entered the prince his hall, where anon we heard the noise of drum and fife.' It will hardly be necessary to state that this note is abridged from one by Thomas Warton, whose passion for the spirit-stirring instruments to which it relates is upon record. The remainder of his note is an attempt to derive the word whistler from vifflour, a fife; but it is probable that it had another origin.

4 Davenant in his Albiovine, and Fletcher in his Prophetess, have each of them imitated this passage of Othello.

5 The quarto of 1522 reads, 'man's eternal soul.'—Perhaps an opposition was designed between man and dog.

6 I. e. all tenderness of nature, all pity; the sense in which remorse is most frequently used by Shakespeare.

7 A similar image is found in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion; where the Moor says:—

Shall dye thy soul as inky as my face.'

8 So in Pericles:—

'If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep,
Untied I still my virgin knot will keep.'

9 A living reason is a reason founded on fact and experience, not on surmise and conjecture; a reason that convinces the understanding as perfectly as if the fact were exhibited to the life.

10 Some foregone conclusion is some former experience. Conclusion is used for experiment or trial in several other places of these plays.

11 The old quarto gives this line to Iago, as well as the two which follow; in the folio it is given to Othello.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs,
That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing
done;

She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,—
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one; 'twas my first gift.

Iago. I know not that: but such a handkerchief,
(I am sure it was your wife's,) did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Iago. If it be that, or any that was hers,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives;
One is too poor, too weak for my revenge!
Now do I see 'tis true.—Look here, Iago;
All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven:¹
'Tis gone.—

Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow⁴ cell!
Yield up, O, love, thy crown, and hearted throne,⁵
To tyrannous hate! I swell, bosom, with thy fraught;⁶
For 'tis of aspics' tongues!

Iago. Pray, be content.

Oth. O, blood, Iago, blood!

Iago. Patience, I say; your mind, perhaps, may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea,⁷
Whose icy current and compulsive course
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont;
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,
Till that a capable⁸ and wide revenge
Swallow them up.—Now, by yond⁹ marble heaven,¹⁰
In the due reverence of a sacred vow [Kneels.
I here engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet.— [Kneels.

Witness, you ever-burning lights above!
You elements that clip us round about!
Witness, that here Iago doth give up
The execution¹⁰ of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's service! let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,¹¹
What bloody work soever.

Oth. I greet thy love,

1 Iago says, 'Yet we see nothing done;' as an oblique and secret mock of what Othello had before said,—Give me the ocular proof.

2 The quarto reads, 'Now do I see 'tis true.'

3 So in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion:—
'Are these your fears? thus blow them into air.'

This was perhaps caught from Horace:—
'Tradam protervis in mare Creticum
Portare ventis.'

4 Hollow, which has been stigmatized by Warburton as a poor unmeaning epithet, gives the idea of what Milton calls—

— the void profound
Of unessential night.

Or the inane profundum of Lucretius. It is used indeed in Milton himself. Paradise Lost, b. i. v. 314:—

'He call'd so loud, that all the hollow deep
Of hell resounded.'

5 The heart on which thou wast enthroned. So in Twelfth Night:—

'It gives a very echo to the seat
Where love is thron'd.'

See Romeo and Juliet, Act v. Sc. 1, ab init.

6 i. e. swell, because the fraught thou art charged with is of poison.

7 From the word Like to marble heaven, inclusively, is not found in the quarto 1622. Pope thinks that it would be better omitted, as an unnatural excursion in this place. Shakespeare probably derived his knowledge upon this subject from the second book and unnumbered chapter of Pliny's Natural History, 1601:—
'And the sea Pontus evermore floweth and runneth out into Propontis; but the sea never retireth backe againe within Pontus.' Mr. Edwards conceived this simile might allude to Sir Philip Sidney's device, whose impress Camden, in his Remains, says, was the Caspian sea, with this motto, Sine refluxu.

8 Capable seems to be here used for capacious, com-

Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance boundteous,

And will upon the instant put thee to't:
Within these three days let me hear thee say,
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead; 'tis done, at your request:
But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx; O, damn her!
Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw,
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.

Iago. I am your own for ever. [Exit.

SCENE IV. The same. Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where lieutenant Cassio lies?

Clow. I dare not say, he lies nny where.

Des. Why, man?

Clow. He is a soldier; and for me to say a soldier lies is stabbing.

Des. Go to; Where lodges he?

Clow. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.¹²

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clow. I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say—he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in my own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report?

Clow. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.¹³

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither: tell him have moved my lord in his behalf, and hope, all will be well.

Clow. To do this, is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit.

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief,
Emilia?

Emil. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzadoes.¹⁴ And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking.

prehenſive. Nashe, in his Pierce Penilesse, 1592, employs the word in the same manner:—'Then belike, quoth I, you make this word, Dæmon, a capable name, of gods, of men, of devils.'

9 This expression occurs in Soliman and Perseda, 1599:—

'Now by the marble face of the welkin,' &c.

So in Marston's Antonio and Mellida, 1602:—

'And pleas'd the marble heavens.'

10 The first quarto reads excellency. By execution Shakespeare meant employment or exercise. So in Love's Labour's Lost:—

'Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,
Which you on all estates will execute.'

And in Troilus and Cressida:—

'In fellest manner execute your arms.'

11 Shakespeare always uses remorse for pity or commiseration. 'Let him command whatever bloody business, and in me it shall be an act not of cruelty but of pity or commiseration to obey him.' The quarto reads, 'What bloody business ever.'

12 This and the following speech are wanting in the first quarto.

13 i. e. and by them, when answered, form my own answer to you. The quaintness of the answer is in character.

14 Cruzadoes were not current, as it should seem, at Venice, though they certainly were in England, in the time of Shakespeare; who has here again departed from the strict propriety of national costume. It appears from Rider's Dictionary that there were three sorts of cruzadoes: one with a long cross, one with a short cross, and the great cruzado of Portugal. They were of gold, and weighed from two pennyweights six grains, to two pennyweights sixteen grains, and differed in value from six shillings and eightpence to nine shillings. The sovereigns who struck these coins were Emanuel and his son John of Portugal. Mr. Douce has given the figure of them in his Illustrations of Shakespeare.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think, the sun, where he was born,
Drew all such humours from him.

Emil. Look, where he comes.

Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio
Be call'd to him.—How is't with you, my lord?

Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. Well, my good lady.—[Aside.] O, hardness to dissemble!—

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Oth. Give me your hand: This hand is moist, my lady.

Des. It yet has felt no age, nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness, and liberal heart;
Hot, hot, and moist; This hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer,
Much castigation, exercise devout;
For here's a young and sweating devil here,
That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,
A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;

For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberal hand: The hearts of old, gave hands;

But our new heraldry is—hands, not hearts.¹

Des. I cannot speak of this. Come, now, your promise.

Oth. What promise, chuck?

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you.

Oth. I have a salt and sullen² rheum offends me;
Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

Oth. That is a fault:

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer,³ and could almost read
The thoughts of people: she told her, while she kept it,

'Twould make her amiable, and subdue my father
Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,
Or mad a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathly, and his spirits should hunt
After new fancies: She, dying, gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wive,
To give it her. I did so: and take heed of't,
Make it a darling like your precious eye;
To lose or give't away, were such perdition,
As nothing else could match.

¹ Warburton thought that this was a satirical allusion to the new order of baronets, created by James I. in 1611. Sir William Blackstone supports him in this supposition, and has pointed out a similar allusion in The Merry Wives of Windsor. But if the play was written in 1602, as Malone presumes, this is a sufficient refutation. Warburton has a further conceit, that by the word hearts the poet meant to allude to the gallantry of the reign of Elizabeth, in which men distinguished themselves by their steel; and that by hands those courtiers were pointed at, who served her inglorious successor by their gold. This is too fanciful to require an answer.—Steevens observes, that 'the absurdity of making Othello so familiar with British heraldry, the utter want of consistency as well as policy in any sneer of Shakspeare at the badge of honours instituted by a prince whom he was solicitous to flatter, and at whose court this very piece was acted in 1613, are strong arguments against the propriety of Warburton's explanation.'

In various parts of our poet's works he has alluded to the custom of plighting troth by the union of hands. So in The Tempest—

'Mir. My husband then?

P'er. Ay, with a heart as willing

As bondage e'er of freedom. Here's my hand.

Mir. And mine, with my heart in it.'

'The hearts of old, (says Othello,) dictated the union of hands, which formerly were joined with the hearts of the parties in them; but in our modern marriages hands alone are united, without hearts.'

Des. Is it possible?

Oth. 'Tis true: there's magic in the web of it:
A sibyl, that had number'd in the world
The sun to make two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;
The worms were hallow'd, that did breed the silk;
And it was dyed in mummy,⁴ which the skilful Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.⁵

Des. Indeed! is't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to't well.

Des. Then 'would to heaven, that I had never seen it.

Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startlingly and rash?

Oth. Is't lost? is't gone? speak, is it out of the way?

Des. Heaven bless us!

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; But what an if it were?

Oth. Ha!

Des. I say it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch't, let me see it.

Des. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now;
This is a trick, to put me from my suit;
I pray, let Cassio be receiv'd again.

Oth. Fetch me that handkerchief: my mind mis-gives.

Des. Come, come;
You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.⁶

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Des. A man that, all his time,
Hath founded his good fortune on your love;

Shar'd dangers with you;——

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Des. In sooth,
You are to blame.

Oth. Away! [Exit OTHELLO.]

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I ne'er saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief;

I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man:
They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,
They belch us. Look you! Cassio, and my husband,

Enter IAGO and CASSIO.

Iago. There is no other way; 'tis she must do't;
And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.

Des. How now, good Cassio? what's the news with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech you,
That, by your virtuous means, I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love,
Whom I, with all the duty of my heart,

² The folio reads 'sorry.' Rider explains sullen by acerbis, Latin.

⁴ The balsamic liquor running from mummies was formerly celebrated for its anti-epileptic virtues. We are now wise enough to know that the qualities ascribed to it are all imaginary; yet this fanciful medicine held a place in the druggists' shops till lately. It was much coveted by painters, as a transparent brown colour that threw a warmth into the shadows of a picture.

⁵ The quarto reads 'with the skilful conserves,' &c. So in The Microcosmos of John Davies of Hereford, 4to 1605:—

'Mummy made of the mere hart of love.'

⁶ This and the following short speech are omitted in all the ancient editions but the first quarto. The singular phraseology, 'talk me of Cassio,' is illustrated in a note on The Taming of the Shrew, Act i. Sc. 2.

⁷ The folio reads 'the office of my heart:' the words were, however, synonymous. Thus Baret:—'Dutie, office, dutie of behaviour in honestie and reason: officium.' So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

—his goodly eyes—now turn

The office and devotion of their view,' &c.

Entirely honour; I would not be delay'd:
If my offence be of such mortal kind,
That neither service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But to know so must be my benefit;¹
So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content,
And shut myself up² in some other course,
To fortune's alms.

Des. Alas! thrice gentle Cassio,
My advocacy is not now in tune;
My lord is not now my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour,³ as in humour, alter'd.
So help me, every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best;
And stood within the blank⁴ of his displeasure,
For my free speech! You must a while be patient;
What I can do, I will; and more I will,
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now,
And, certainly, in strange unquietness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air;
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother;—And can he be angry?
Something of moment, then: I will go meet him;
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I prythee, do so.—Something, sure, of state,— [Exit IAGO.]

Either from Venice; or some unhatch'd practice,⁵
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,—
Hath puddled his clear spirit: and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so:
For let our finger ache, and it indues⁶
Our other healthful members ev'n to that sense
Of pain: Nay, we must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observances
As fit the bridal.—Beshrew me much, Emilia,
I was, (unhandsome warrior⁷ as I am),
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find, I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indicted falsely.

Emil. Pray heaven, it be state matters, as you think;

And no conception, nor no jealous toy,
Concerning you.

Des. Alas, the day! I never gave him cause.

Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster,
Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen.

Des. I will go seek him.—Cassio, walk hereabout:
If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit,
And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.

[Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.]

1 'Si nequeo placidas affari Cæsaris aures,
Saltem aliquis veniat, qui mihi dicat, abi.'

2 Here again is a strange discordance of opinion in the commentators on the meaning of shut myself up, which evidently signifies no more than 'confine myself.' One of the old quartos reading 'shoot myself up,' by mistake, Mason absurdly contends for that reading.—'To fortune's alms' means waiting patiently for whatever bounty fortune, or chance, may bestow upon me. We have the same uncommon phrase in King Lear:—

'——— Let your study

Be to content your lord, who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms.'

3 i. e. In countenance.

4 To stand within the blank is to stand in the direct range or in the immediate course; to have his displeasure directed toward her.

5 Some undeveloped treason.

6 I have elsewhere observed that to indue was used formerly where we now use to imbue. Ophelia, in Hamlet, Act iv. Sc. 7, is said to be 'indued unto that element.' Malone has well explained the meaning of

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?

How is it with you, my most fair Bianca?

I'faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eight score times?

O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca;

I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;

But I shall, in a more continuant time,

Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

[Giving her DESDEMONA'S Handkerchief.]

Take me this work out.⁹

Bian. O, Cassio, whence came this?

This is some token from a newer friend.

To the felt absence now I feel a cause:

Is it come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Go to! woman,

Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,

From whence you have them. You are jealous, now,

That this is from some mistress, some remembrance:

No, in good troth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber.

I like the work well; ere it be demanded,

(As like enough, it will,) I'd have it copied:

Take it, and do't: and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;

And think it no addition, nor my wish,

To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?¹⁰

Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.

I pray you, bring me on the way a little;

And say, if I shall see you soon at night.

Cas. 'Tis but a little way, that I can bring you,

For I attend here: but I'll see you soon.

Bian. 'Tis very good; I must be circumstanc'd.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before the Castle. Enter OTHELLO. and IAGO.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth. Think so, Iago?

Iago. What?

To kiss in private?

Oth. An unauthoris'd kiss.

Iago. Or to be naked with her friend abed,

An hour, or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth. Naked abed, Iago, and not mean harm?

It is hypocrisy against the devil:¹¹

the passage:—'Let but our finger ache, and this sensation so gets possession of, and is so infused into the other members, as to make them all partipate of the pain.'

'—— totumque infusa per artus,

Mens agitat molem, et magno se corpore miscet.'

7 i. e. the nuptial feast. 8 See Act II. Sc. 1.

9 i. e. copy this work in another handkerchief. See Act III. Sc. 3. So in Middleton's Women beware Women:—

'——— she intends

To take out other works in a new sampler.'

Again in the Preface to Holland's Pliny, 1601:—'Nicophanes (a famous painter) gave his mind wholly to antique pictures, partly to exemplify and take out patterns, after that in long continuance of time they were decayed.'

10 This and the following speech are wanting in the first quarto.

11 'We must suppose that Iago had been applying cases of false comfort to Othello; as that though the parties had been even found in bed together, there might be no harm done: it might be only for trial of their virtue; as was reported of the Romish saint, Robert D'Arbrissel, and his nuns.'—Warburton.

They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts,¹ and they tempt heaven.

Iago. So they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip:

But if I give my wife a handkerchief,—

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then, 'tis hers, my lord; and, being hers,

She may, I think, bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too;
May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;
They have it very oft, that have it not:

But, for the handkerchief,—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it:—

Thou said'st,—O, it comes o'er my memory,
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boding to all,²—he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?

Oth. That's not so good, now.

Iago. What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say,—As knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinced or supplied³ them, cannot choose
But they must blab—

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well assur'd,
No more than he'll unsware.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. 'Faith, that he did,—I know not what he did.

Oth. What? what?

Iago. Lie—

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. Lie with her! lie on her!—We say, lie on her, when they belie her: Lie with her! that's falsome.—Handkerchief,—confession,—handkerchief.—To confess, and be hanged for his labour.⁴
—First to be hanged, and then to confess:—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction.⁵
It is not words, that shake me thus:—Pish!—
Noses, ears, and lips:—Is it possible?—Confess!
—Handkerchief!—O, devil!—[Falls in a Trance.]

Iago. Work on,

My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;

And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus,
All guiltless meet reproach.—What, ho! my lord!

1 The devil tempts their virtue by stirring up their passions, and they tempt heaven by placing themselves in a situation which makes it scarcely possible to avoid falling by the gratification of them: Perhaps the story of St. Adhelm, related in Bale's Actes of Englysh Votararies, is referred to:—This Adhelmus never refused women, but wold have them commonly both at borde and bedde, to mocke the devyll with, &c. See also Fabian's Chronicle, Part iv. ch. 141.

2 The raven was thought to be a constant attendant on a house infected with the plague.

3 i.e. having by their own importunacy overcome the resistance of a mistress, or, in compliance with her own request, and in consequence of her unsolicited fondness, gratified her desires. Mariana tells Angelo, in Measure for Measure:—

'And did supply thee as thy garden house.'
Theobald thought that supplied should be suppled, i.e. 'made her pliant to his desires.'

4 This proverbial saying is used in Marlowe's Jew of Malta:

'Blame us not, but the proverbe—Confess and be hanged.'

And in one of the old collections there is an epigram on it—All that remains of this speech, from to confess, is wanting in the quarto.

5 'The starts and broken reflections in this speech (says Warburton) have something in them very terrible, and show the mind of the speaker to be in inexpressible agonies.'

There is a difference of opinion between the commentators, some thinking with Warburton that the words 'Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing

Enter CASSIO.

My lord, I say! Othello!—How now, Cassio?

Cas. What is the matter?

Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsy;

This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the temples.

Iago.

No, forbear:

The lethargy must have his quiet course:

If not, he foams at mouth; and, by and by,

Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:

Do you withdraw yourself a little while,

He will recover straight; when he is gone,

I would on great occasion speak with you.—

[Exit CASSIO.]

How is it, general? have you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago.

I mock you! no, by heaven;

'Would, you would bear your fortunes like a man.

Oth. A horned man's a monster, and a beast.

Iago. There's many a beast, then, in a populous city,

And many a civil monster.

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago.

Good sir, be a man;

Think, every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,

May draw with you; there's millions now alive,

That nightly lie in those unproper beds,

Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better.

O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,

To lip a wanton in a secure couch,

And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;

And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. O, thou art wise; 'tis certain.

Iago.

Stand you awhile apart;

Confine yourself but in a patient list.⁶
Whilst you were here, ere while mad⁷ with your grief,

(A passion most unsuited such a man,)

Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,

And laid good 'scuse upon your ecstasy;

Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;

The which he promis'd. Do but encave¹⁰ yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,

That dwell in every region of his face;¹¹

For I will make him tell the tale anew,—

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is again to cope your wife:

I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience:

Or I shall say, you are all in all in spleen,

And nothing of a man.

Oth.

Dost thou hear, Iago?

I will be found most cunning in my patience;

But (dost thou hear?) most bloody.

passion, without some instruction, allude to his own feelings: others that they advert to the story about Cassio's dream, which had been invented and told him by Iago. I must confess that I incline to the latter opinion: 'Nature would not express such adumbrations of passion without some former experience.' I think this view of the passage confirmed by these words in a former scene:—

'Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion.'

For (as Sir Joshua Reynolds observes) 'Othello, in broken sentences and single words, all of which have a reference to the cause of his jealousy, shows that all the proofs are present at once to his mind, which so overpower it that he falls into a trance.'

6 Unproper for common. So in The Mative, a collection of Epigrams and Satires:—

'Rose is a fayre, but not a proper woman
Can any creature proper be that's common?'

7 In a couch in which he is lulled into a false security and confidence in his wife's virtue: a Latin sense. So in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—'Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty,' &c.

8 i.e. within the bounds of patience.

9 The folio reads 'o'erwhelmed with your grief.'

10 Hide yourself in a private place.

11 Congreve might have had this passage in his memory when he made Lady Touchwood say to Maskwell, 'Ten thousand meanings lurk in each corner of that various face.'

Iago. That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?
[OTHELLO withdraws.
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife, that by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and clothes: It is a creature,
That dotes on Cassio,—as 'tis the strumpet's plague,
To beguile many, and be beguil'd by one;
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter!—Here he comes:—

Re-enter CASSIO.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish¹ jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour
Quite in the wrong.—How do you now, lieutenant?
Cas. The worse, that you give me the addition,
Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure of't.
Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power, [Speaking lower.
How quickly should you speed?

Cas. Alas, poor caitiff!
Oth. Look, how he laughs already! [Aside.
Iago. I never knew a woman love man so.
Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think 't'faith she loves me.
Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out. [Aside.

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?
Oth. Now he importunes him
To tell it o'er: Go to; well said, well said. [Aside.
Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry her:
Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha!
Oth. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph?²
[Aside.
Cas. I marry her!—what? a customer!³ I pr'ythee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!
Oth. So, so, so, so: They laugh that win. [Aside.

Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes, that you shall marry
her.

Cas. Pr'ythee, say true.
Iago. I am a very villain else.
Oth. Have you scored me!⁴ Well. [Aside.
Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story.
[Aside.

Cas. She was here even now: she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the seabank with certain Venetians; and thither comes this bauble; by this hand,⁵ she falls thus about my neck;—

Oth. Crying, O, dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it. [Aside.

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me;
so hales, and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!—

Oth. Now he tells, how she pluck'd him to my chamber: O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to. [Aside.

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.
Iago. Before me! look where she comes.

Enter BIANCA.

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew!⁶ marry, a perfumed one.—What do you mean by this haunting of me?

² Othello calls him Roman ironically. Triumph brought Roman into his thoughts. 'What (says he) you are triumphing as great as a Roman?'

³ A common woman, with whom any one may be familiar.

⁴ I. e. 'have you numbered my days?' To score is to tale or tell, to number, or mark as on a tally. But perhaps it only means, 'have you marked me?' as beasts are scored or marked when purchased for slaughter. The old quarto reads 'have you stored me?'

⁵ The folio omits 'by this hand'; and reads 'thither comes the bauble and falls me thus' &c.

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you!
What did you mean by that same handkerchief, you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the whole work?—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work!
There,—give it your hobby-horse: wheresoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca? how now?
how now?

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief.
[Aside.

Bian. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may: an you will not, come when you are next prepared for. [Exit.

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. 'Faith, I must, she'll rail in the street else

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, come; Will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more. [Exit CASSIO.

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice?

Oth. O, Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand: and to see bow he prizes the foolish woman, your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a killing:—A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damned to-night; for she shall not live: No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand.⁷

O, the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side, and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is:—So delicate with her needle!—An admirable musician!
O, she will sing the savageness out of a bear!⁸

Of so high and plenteous wit and invention!—

Iago. She is the worse for all this.

Oth. O, a thousand, a thousand times:—And then, of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain: But yet the pity of it,
Iago!—O, Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend;⁹ for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into messes!—Cuckold me!

Iago. O, 'tis foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Get me some poison, Iago: this night:—
I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide my mind again: this night, Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good: the justice of it pleases; very good.

Iago. And, for Cassio,—let me be his undertaker: You shall hear more by midnight.

[A Trumpet within.

⁶ Shakespeare has alluded to the lust of this animal in King Lear. He tells Iago that Bianca is as lewd, but of a better scent, the polecats being a very stinking animal.

⁷ This thought, which counteracts the pathos, occurs again in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iv. Sc. 3:—

————— throw my heart

Against the flint and hardness of my fault,
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts.'

⁸ ————— when she hath sung,

The tiger would be tame.' Venus and Adonis

⁹ 'Why then give sin a passport to offend?'

Tragedy of King Edward III. 1596.

Oth. Excellent good.—What trumpet is that same?

Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico,

Come from the duke: and, see, your wife is with him.

Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.

Lod. 'Save you, worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you.

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior;

Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you: How does lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fallen between him and my

lord

An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord?

Oth. This fail you not to do, as you will—

Lod. He did not call; he's busy in the paper.

Is there division 'twixt thy lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one; I would do much

To atone² them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone!

Des. My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. May be, the letter mov'd him;

For, as I think, they do command him home,

Deputing Cassio in his government.

Des. By my troth, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed.

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. How, sweet Othello?

Oth. Devil!

Des. I have not deserv'd this.

Lod. My lord, this would not be believ'd in Venice;

Though I should swear I saw it: 'Tis very much,

Make her amends, she weeps.

Oth. O, devil, devil!

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,

Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile:³—

Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you.

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:—

I do beseech your lordship, call her back.

Oth. Mistress,——

Des. My lord?

1 The quarto reads 'God save the worthy general.' Malone says that the reply of Othello does not relate to what Lodovico has just said, but is spoken by Othello while he salutes him. Steevens, on the contrary, thinks that 'The distracted Othello, considering his happiness in this world at an end, readily catches at the idea of future felicity suggested by the words Save you, general.' He adds, 'If it be urged that the words only mean preserve you in this world, my sense of the passage will not be much weakened; as our protection, even here, depends on the Almighty.'—In Measure for Measure (Act ii. Sc. 2) two replies of Angelo to similar salutations from Isabel are equally equivocal.

2 i. e. make them one, reconcile them.

3 'If women's tears could impregnate the earth.' By the doctrine of equivocal generation new animals were supposed producible by new combinations of matter. See Bacon, v. iii. p. 70, edit. 1740. Shakspeare here alludes to the fabulous accounts which make the crocodile the most deceitful of animals, whose tears are proverbially fallacious. 'It is written that he will weep over a man's head when he hath devoured the body, and will then eat up the head too.' Wherefore in Latin there is a proverb, 'Crocodile lachrymæ, crocodile teares, to signifye such teares as are feigned, and spent only with intent to deceive or do harm.'—Bullockar's Expositor, 1616.

To fall, in this passage, is a verb active.

Oth. What would you with her, sir?

Lod. Who, I, my lord?

Oth. Ay; you did wish that I would make her turn;

Sir, she can turn, and turn,⁴ and yet go on,

And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep;

And she's obedient, as you say,—obedient,—

Very obedient:—Proceed you in your tears.—

Concerning this, sir,—O, well painted passion!

I am commanded home:⁵—Get you away;

I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate,

And will return to Venice;—Hence, avaunt!

Exit DESDEMONA.

Cassio shall have my place. And,—sir,—to-night,

I do entreat that we may sup together.

You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus.—Goats, and monkeys.⁶

Exit.

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full senate

Call—all-in-all sufficient?—This the noble nature

Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue

The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,

Could neither graze, nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?

Iago. He is that he is; I may not breathe my censure.

What he might be,—if what he might, he is not,—

I would to heaven, he were.

Lod. What, strike his wife!

Iago. 'Faith, that was not so well; Yet 'would I knew,

That stroke would prove the worst.

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the letters work upon his blood,

And new create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me, to speak

What I have seen and known. You shall observe

him;

And his own courses will denote him so,

That I may save my speech: Do but go after,

And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry, that I am deceiv'd in him.

Exit.

SCENE II.' A Room in the Castle. Enter.

OTHELLO and EMILIA.

Oth. You have seen nothing, then?

Emil. Nor ever heard; nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Ycs, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harm: and then I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

Emil. Never.

4 So in King Henry VI. Part I.

'Done like a Frenchman; turn and turn again.'

5 The quarto reads, 'I am commanded here.'

6 In this exclamation Shakspeare has shown great art. Iago in the first scene, in which he endeavours to awaken his suspicion, being urged to give some evident proof of the guilt of Cassio and Desdemona, tells him it were impossible to have ocular demonstration of it, though they should be as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys. These words, we may suppose, still ring in the ears of Othello, who, being now fully convinced of his wife's infidelity, rushes out with this emphatic exclamation: 'Iago's words were but too true; now, indeed,

I am convinced that they are as hot as goats and monkeys.'

7 There are great difficulties in ascertaining the place of this scene. What Othello says in an early part of it to Emilia—'Leave procreants alone, and shut the door,'— and his subsequent address to her as he goes out, decisively point out a room in Othello's Castle as the place of the scene; and compel us to place the interlocutors

there, however inconsistent with Roderigo's entry, and

Iago's address to Desdemona, 'Go in and weep not.'

The truth is, that our poet and his audience, in this instance, as in many others, were content, from want of scenery, to consider the very same spot, at one and the same time, as the outside and inside of a house. See the Historical Account of the English Stage, &c. [Boswell's edition of Malone's Shakspeare, vol. iii.]—Malone.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest, Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other, Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom. If any wretch hath put this in your head, Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse! For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true, There's no man happy; the purest of their wives! Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—go.—

[Exit EMILIA.]

She says enough:—yet she's a simple bawd, That cannot say as much. This is a subtle whore, A closet-lock-and-key of villainous secrets: And yet she'll kneel, and pray; I have seen her do't.

Re-enter EMILIA, with DESDEMONA.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes; Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. Some of your function, mistress;

[To EMILIA.]

Leave procreants alone, and shut the door;

Cough, or cry—hem, if any body come:

Your mystery, your mystery;—nay despatch.

[Exit EMILIA.]

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech import?

I understand a fury in your words,

But not the words.¹

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;

Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double damn'd,

Swear—thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? How am I false?

Oth. O, Desdemona!—away! away! away!

Des. Alas, the heavy day!—Why do you weep? Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord?

If, haply, you my father do suspect,

An instrument of this your calling back,

Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost him, Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd heaven

To try me with affliction; had he rain'd

All kinds of sores, and shames, on my bare head; Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips; Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes; I should have found in some part of my soul A drop of patience: but (alas!) to make me A fixed figure, for the time of scorn,² To point his slow unmoving finger at,— O! O!

Yet could I bear that too; well, very well: But there, where I have garner'd³ up my heart; Where either I must live, or bear no life;⁴ The fountain from the which my current runs, Or else dries up; to be discarded thence! Or keep it as a cistern, for foul toads To knot and gender in!⁵—turn thy complexion there!

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubim;

Ay, there, look grim as hell!⁷

Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest.

Oth. O, ay; as summer flies are in the shambles, That quicken even with blowing. O, thou weed,⁸ Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet, That the sense aches at thee.—Would, thou hadst ne'er been born!

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed? Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book, Made to write whore upon? What committed?⁹

Committed!—O, thou public commoner!

I should make very forges of my cheeks,

That would to cinders burn up modesty,

Did I but speak thy deeds.—What committed!

Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks;

The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,¹⁰

Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,

And will not hear it: What committed!—

Impudent strumpet!

Des. By heaven, you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian:

If to preserve this vessel for my lord,¹¹

From any other foul unlawful touch,

Be—not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be saved.

Oth. Is it possible?

Des. O, heaven forgive us!

Oth.

I cry your mercy, then;

I took you for that cunning whore of Venice,

That married with Othello.—You, mistress,

Re-enter EMILIA.

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,

And keep the gate of hell; You! you! ay, you!

We have done our course; there's money for your pains;

I pray you, turn the key, and keep our counsel.

[Exit.]

Emil. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?

How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?

Des. Faith, half asleep.

5 'Whereby we do exist or cease to be.' Lear

6 So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made A cistern for scald snakes.'

7 'At such an object do thou, patience, thyself change colour; at this do thou, even thou, rosy cherub as thou art, look grim as hell.' The old copies have, 'I here look grim as hell.' I was written for ay; and here was an evident error of the press for there. Theo baid made the correction.

8 The quarto reads:—

'O thou black weed, why art so lovely fair? Thou smell'st so sweet, that the sense aches at thee.'

9 This and the three following lines are not in the first quarto. The peculiar sense in which committed is here used may be gathered from King Lear, Act iii. Sc. 14:—'Commit not with man's sworn spouse.' It is so used by many of our old writers, and comes from the transgression, being a violation of the commandment, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery.'

10 So in the Merchant of Venice:—

'Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind.'

11 This expression is from Sacred Writ:—'To possess his vessel in sanctification.'

1 The quarto reads 'of her sex.'

2 This line is not in the folio.

3 Rowe reads 'the hand of scorn,' an elegant and satisfactory emendation; and it is to be wished that there was sufficient authority to admit it into the text. Steevens thinks the old reading right, saying, that Othello takes his idea from a clock: 'To make me (says he) a fixed figure (on the dial of the world) for the hour of scorn to point and make a full stop at'—adjoining many similar expressions in defence of it, as 'the hour of death,' 'the day of judgment,' 'the moment of evil;' and in King Richard the Third:—

'Had you such leisure in the time of death?'

The folio reads and moving instead of unmoving. To me there seems to be no objection in 'slow moving;' about which Malone and Mason make difficulties. The epithet derives support from Shakspeare's 104th Sonnet:—

'Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand, Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived; So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand, Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceived.'

The finger of the dial was the technical phrase. And in The Comedy of Errors we have—

'Time's deformed [i. e. deforming] hand.'

4 I. e. treasured up.

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?

Des. With who?

Emil. Why, with my lord, madam,

Des. Who is thy lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.

Des. I have none: Do not talk to me, Emilia; I cannot weep; nor answer I have none, But what should go by water.¹ 'Pr'ythee, to-night Lay on my bed my wedding sheets,—remember;—And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Here is a change indeed! [Exit.]

Des. 'Tis meet I should be us'd so, very meet. How have I been behav'd, that he might stick The small'st opinion on my great'st abuse?²

Re-enter EMILIA, with IAGO.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is it with you?

Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks: He might have chid me so; for, in good faith, I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?

Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewor'd her, Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her, As true hearts cannot bear.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name, fair lady?

Des. Such as, she says, my lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her, whore; a beggar in his drink Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.³

Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know; I am sure, I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep; Alas, the day!

Emil. Has she forsook so many noble matches, Her father and her country, and her friends, To be call'd—where? would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for it!

How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain, Some busy and insinuating rogue, Some cogging cozening slave, to get some office, Have not devis'd this slander; I'll be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man; it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him!

Emil. A halter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

Why should he call her, whore? who keeps her company?

What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?

The Moor's abus'd by some most villanous knave,⁵ Some base notorious⁶ knave, some scurvy fellow:—O, heaven, that such companions⁷ thou'dst unfold;

1 This and the following speech are not in the quarto.

2 There are some lines on the death of Queen Elizabeth, in Camden, also to be found in Decker's Wonderful Yeare, 1603, which conclude with a similar conceit:—

'I think the barge-men might with easler thighs Have rowed her thither in her people's eyes: For how-so-ere, thus much my thoughts have scann'd, Shad come by water, had she come by land.'

3 This is the reading of the quarto: which Dr. Johnson thought preferable to the reading of the folio—on my least misuse.

4 A callet is a trull, a drab. The word is of great antiquity in the English language. Chaucer has it in his Remedy of Love. Harington uses it in his translation of Ariosto, 1591:—

'And thus this old ill-favour'd spiteful callet.' In a note he says, 'Callet is a nick-name used to a woman;' and that in Irish it signifies a witch. The etymology of the word is yet to seek.

5 The quarto has, 'some outrageous knave.'

6 Some notorious knave is here used for some knave worthy to be noted, or branded to everlasting infamy.

7 It has been already observed that companions was a term of contempt.

8 'Do not clamour so as to be heard beyond the house.'

And put in every honest hand a whip, To lash the rascal naked through the world, Even from the east to the west!

Iago. Speak within door.⁸

Emil. O, fie upon him! some such squire he was, That turn'd your wit the seamy side without,⁹ And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. O, good Iago, What shall I do to win my lord again? Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven, I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:¹⁰

If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love, Either in discourse of thought,¹¹ or actual deed;

Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense, Delighted them in any other form;

Or that I do not yet, and ever did, And ever will,—though he do shake me off

To beggarly divorcement,—love him dearly, Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much;

And his unkindness may defeat my life,

But never taint my love. I cannot say, whore;

It does abhor me, now I speak the word;

To do the act that might the addition earn,

Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, be content; 'tis but his humour;

The business of the state does him offence,

And he does chide with you.¹²

Des. If 'twere no other,—

Iago. It is but so, I warrant you. [Trumpets.]

Hark, how these instruments summon to supper!

And the great messengers of Venice stay:¹³

Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.]

Enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo?

Rod. I do not find, that thou deal'st justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?

Rod. Every day thou doff'st me with some device, Iago; and rather, (as it seems to me now,) keep'st from me all convenience, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will, indeed, no longer endure it: Nor am I yet persuaded, to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo?

Rod. Faith, I have heard too much; for your words and performances, are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me, to deliver to Desdemona, would half have corrupted a votarist: You have told me she has received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance;¹⁴ but I find none.

9 Iago, in a former scene, speaks of Roderigo as of one 'Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side outward.'

10 The quarto omits the rest of this speech.

11 'Discourse of thought' is the 'discursive range of thought.' Pope changed it to 'discourse or thought.' I have shown in a former page that the old reading is the poet's mode of expression. So in Davies's Epigrams, v. In Plurimos:—

'But since the diuell brought them thus together, To my discoursing thoughts it is a wonder, Why presently, as soone as they came thither, The selfe same diuell did them part asunder.'

Steevens thought Pope's alteration defensible, because the Liturgy mentions three modes of committing sin—'in thought, word, and deed.'

12 This was the phraseology of the time. 'To complain, to make a quarrel, to chide with one for a thing. Expostulare et queri.' Again:—'Is it best to chide with him or take him up for this displeasure or wrong?'

13 So Shakspeare's 11th Sonnet:—

'O for my sake do you with fortune chide.'

14 Thus the quarto. The folio poorly reads:—

'The messengers of Venice stay the meat.'

15 The folio reads acquaintance. Acquittance is re- quital. So in King Henry V.:—

'And shall forge the office of our hand
Sooner than 'quittance of desert and merit'

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor 'tis not very well: By this hand, I say, it is very scurvy; and begin to find myself fobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you, 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself, I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee; and even, from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo: Thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant, indeed, it hath not appeared; and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment.¹ But, Roderigo, if thou hast that within thee, indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean, purpose, courage, and valour,—this night show it: if thou the next night enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and devise engines for my life.²

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason, and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be linger'd here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean—removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me do?

Iago. Ay; if you dare do yourself a profit, and a right. He sups to-night with a harlot,³ and thither will I go to him;—he knows not yet of his honourable fortune: if you will watch his going thence, (which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one,) you may take him at your pleasure; I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste:⁴ about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exit.

SCENE III. Another Room in the Castle. Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. O, pardon me; 'twill do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

¹ 'Shakespeare knew well that most men like to be flattered on account of those endowments in which they are most deficient. Hence Iago's compliment to this snipe on his sagacity and shrewdness.'—Malone.

² To devise engines seems to mean to contrive instruments of torture, &c. So in King Lear:—

'—like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature.'

³ The folio reads 'a harlotry.' Shakespeare has the expression, 'a peevish self-will'd harlotry,' in two other places.

⁴ i. e. the night is wasting away. So in Julius Cæsar:—

'Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.'

⁵ The quarto of 1623 reads 'good faith.'

⁶ Mad must here be accepted as meaning wild, unruly, fickle. As a constant mind meant a firm or sound one, inconstancy would of course be considered a species of madness.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?—

O.—Desdemona,—

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant, I will be returned forthwith: dismiss your attendant there; look, it be done.

Des. I will, my lord.

[Exit OTH. LOD. and Attendants.]

Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says he will return incontinent. He hath commanded me to go to bed, And bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia, Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu: We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would you had never seen him!

Des. So would not I; my love doth so approve him, That even his stubbornness, his checks, and frowns, Pr'ythee, unpin me,—have grace and favour in them.

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All's one:—Good father! how foolish are our minds!—

If I do die before thee, 'pr'ythee, shroud me In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd—Barbara; She was in love; and, he, she lov'd, prov'd mad, And did forsake her: she had a song of—willow, An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune, And she died singing it: That song, to-night, Will not go from my mind; I have much to do, But to go hang my head all at one side, And sing it like poor Barbara. 'Pr'ythee, despatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?

Des. No, unpin me here,—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. And he speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice, who would have walked barefoot to Palestine, for a touch of his nether lip.

I.

Des. The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree, Sing all a green willow; [Singing.]

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,

Sing willow, willow, willow:

The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;

Sing willow, &c.

Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones;

Lay by these:

Sing willow, willow, willow;

'Pr'ythee, his thee; he'll come anon.—

Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

II.

Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve,—

Nay, that's not next—Hark! who is it that knocks?

⁷ From I have much to do, to Nay, that's not next, was inserted after the first edition in quarto, 1623, as was likewise the remaining part of the song. Desdemona means to say—I have much to do to do any thing but hang my head, &c. 'This (says Dr. Johnson) is perhaps the only insertion made in the latter editions which has improved the play: the rest seem to have been added for the sake of amplification or ornament. When the imagination had subsided, and the mind was no longer agitated by the horror of the action, it became at leisure to look round for specious additions. This addition is natural. Desdemona can at first hardly forbear to sing the song; she endeavours to change her train of thought, but her imagination at last prevails, and she sings it.—The ballad, in two parts, printed from the original in black letter in the Pepys's collection, is to be found in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. p. 192.

Emil. It is the wind.

Des. I call'd my love, false love; but what said he then?

Sing willow, &c.

If I court no women, you'll couch with no men.¹

So, get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do itch? Doth that bode weeping?

Emil. 'Tis neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so.²—O, these men, these men!—

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,—That there be women do abuse their husbands in such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. Why, would not you?

Des. No, by this heavenly light!

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light;

I might do't as well i' the dark.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. The world is a huge thing: 'Tis a great price

For a small vice.

Des. Good troth, I think thou would'st not.

Emil. By my troth, I think I should; and undo't, when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring;³ nor for measures of lawn; nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition: but, for the whole world,—Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world.

Emil. Why the wrong is but a wrong i' the world; and, having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many To the vantage,⁴ as would store the world they play'd for.

But I do think, it is their husbands' faults If wives do fall: Say, that they slack their duties, And pour our treasures into foreign laps;⁵ Or else break out in peevish jealousies, Throwing restraint upon us; or, say they strike us, Or scant our former having⁶ in despite: Why, we have galls; and, though we have some grace,

Yet we have some revenge. Let husbands know, Their wives have sense⁷ like them: they see, and smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour, As husbands have. What is it that they do, When they change us for others? Is it sport? I think it is; And doth affection breed it? I think it doth; Is't frailty, that thus errs?

1 This couplet is not in the original ballad, which is the complaint not of a woman forsaken, but of a man rejected. These lines were properly added when it was accommodated to a woman.

2 This as well as the following speech is omitted in the first quarto.

3 A joint-ring was anciently a common token among lovers. See Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. 1632, p. 544. Their nature will be best understood by a passage in Dryden's Don Sebastian:—

—a curious artist wrought them,
With joints so close as not to be perceived;
Yet are they both each other's counterpart:

—and, in the midst,
A heart divided in two halves was placed.

4 i. e. to boot, over and above. The remaining part of this speech is omitted in the first quarto.

5 So in Shakspeare's 142d Sonnet:—

'Robb'd other beds' revenues of their rents.'

6 Our former allowance of expense.

7 Sense is here used, as in Hamlet, for sensation, or sensual appetites.

8 The old copy reads, 'their ills instruct us so.'

It is so too; And have not we affections?

Desires for sport? and frailty, as men have?

Then, let them use us well: else, let them know,

The ills we do, their ills instruct us to.⁸

Des. Good night, good night; Heaven me such usage⁹ send,

Not to pick bad from bad; but, by bad, mend!

[Exeunt]

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Street. Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come;

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:

Quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow:

It makes us, or it mars us; think on that,

And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here, at thy hand; be bold, and take thy sword. [Retires to a little distance.]

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed;

And yet he has given me satisfying reasons:—

'Tis but a man gone:—forth, my sword; he dies.

[Goes to his stand.]

Iago. I have rubb'd this young quat almost to the sense,¹⁰

And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,

Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,

Every way makes my gain:¹¹ Live Roderigo,

He calls me to a restitution large

Of gold and jewels that I bobb'd¹² from him,

As gifts to Desdemona;

It must not be: if Cassio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life,

That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor

May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril:

No, he must die:—But so, I hear him coming.

Enter CASSIO.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he;—villain, thou diest.

[Rushes from his post, and takes a pass at CASSIO.]

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed, But that my coat is better than thou think'st;

I will make proof of thine.

[Draws and wounds RODERIGO.]

Rod. O, I am slain!

[IAGO rushes from his post, cuts CASSIO behind in the Leg,¹³ and exit.]

Cas. I am maim'd for ever:—Help, ho! murder! murder!

[Falls.]

Enter OTHELLO, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. Hark! 'Tis even so.

Cas. O, help! ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he;—O, brave Iago, honest, and just,

That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!

Thou teachest me,—Minion, your dear lies dead,

9 'Such uses' is the reading of the folio; but the first quarto has 'such usage,' which Dr. Johnson prefers, I think, without reason.

10 A quat, in the midland counties, is still used for a pimple, which by rubbing is made to smart, or rubbed to sense. Roderigo is called a quat by the same mode of speech as a low fellow is now termed in low language a scab. To rub to the sense is to rub to the quick. This explanation by Dr. Johnson had previously appeared in the British Magazine, 1748, p. 425. So in The Devil's Law Case, 1623:—'O yong quat! incontinence is plagued in all the creatures of the world.' The word is also used in Decker's Gul's Hornbook.

11 The quartos read 'my game.'

12 'That I foob'd him out of.' To bob is to cheat or deceive with a false tale. So in Turberville's Songs and Sonnets:—

'When wedding day was doon,
To play her pranks, and bob the foole,
The strowish wife begoon.'

13 Iago maims Cassio in the leg, in consequence of what he had just heard him say; from which he supposed that his body was defended by some secret armour.

And your fate hies¹ apace ;—Strumpet, I come :
Forth² of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are blotted ;
Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted. [Exit OTHELLO.]

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO, at a distance.

Cas. What, ho ! no watch ! no passage ?³ murder ! murder !

Gra. 'Tis some mischance ; the cry is very direful.

Cas. O, help !

Lod. Hark !

Rod. O, wretched villain !

Lod. Two or three groans :—it is a heavy⁴ night :
These may be counterfeits ; let's think't unsafe
To come into the cry, without more help.

Rod. Nobody come ? then shall I bleed to death.

Enter IAGO, with a Light.

Lod. Hark !

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Who's there ? whose noise is this, that cries on murder ?⁵

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did you not hear a cry ?

Cas. Here, here ; for heaven's sake, help me.

Iago. What's the matter ?

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same, indeed ; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously ?

Cas. Iago ? O, I am spoil'd, undone by villains !

Give me some help.

Iago. O me, lieutenant ! what villains have done
this ?

Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout,
And cannot make away.

Iago. O, treacherous villains !—
What are you there ? come in, and give some help.
[To LODOVICO and GRATIANO.]

Rod. O, help me here !

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O, murderous slave ! O, villain !

[IAGO stabs RODERIGO.]

Rod. O, damn'd Iago ! O, inhuman dog !—
O ! O ! O !

Iago. Kill men i' the dark !—Where be these bloody thieves ?

How silent is this town !—Ho ! murder ! murder !

What may you be ? are you of good, or evil ?

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico ?

Lod. He, sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy ; Here's Cassio hurt
By villains.

Gra. Cassio ?

Iago. How is it, brother ?

Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid !—
Light, gentlemen ; I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. What is the matter, ho ? who is't that cry'd ?

Iago. Who is't that cry'd ?

Bian. O, my dear Cassio ! my sweet Cassio !
O, Cassio ! Cassio ! Cassio !

Iago. O, notable strumpet !—Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be, that have thus mangled you ?
Cas. No.

Gra. I am sorry, to find you thus : I have been to seek you.

Iago. Lend me a garter :⁶ So.—O, for a chair,
To bear him easily hence !

Bian. Alas, he faints :—O, Cassio ! Cassio !
Cassio !

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury.⁷

Patience awhile, good Cassio.—Come, come ;

Lend me a light.—Know we this face, or no ?

Alas ! my friend, and my dear countryman,⁸

Roderigo ? no :—Yes, sure ; O, heaven ! Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice ?

Iago. Even he, sir ; did you know him ?

Gra. Know him, ay.

Iago. Signior Gratiano ? I cry you gentle pardon ;

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio ?—O, a chair, a chair !

Gra. Roderigo ?

Iago. He, he, 'tis he :—O, that's well said ;—the chair :— [A Chair brought in.]

Some good man bear him carefully from hence ;

I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—For you, mistress,
[To BIANCA.]

Save you your labour. He that lies slain here,
Cassio,

Was my dear friend : What malice was between you ?

Cas. None in the world ; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To BIANCA.] What, look you pale ?—O, bear him out o' the air.—

[CASSIO and ROD. are borne off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen :⁹—Look you pale, mistress ?

Do you perceive the gastness of her eye ?¹⁰—

Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon :—

Behold her well ; I pray you, look upon her ;

Do you see, gentlemen ? nay, guiltiness will speak,
Though tongues were out of use.¹¹

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter ; what's the matter, husband ?

Iago. Cassio hath been set on in the dark.

By Roderigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd ;

He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman ! alas, good Cassio !

Iago. This is the fruit of whoring.—Pr'ythee,
Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night :¹²—

What, do you shake at that ?

¹ Thus the first quarto. The second quarto and the folio read 'And your unblest fate hies.'

² The folio reads 'for off'; the quarto reads forth off, i. e. out of. So in King Richard III.—

³ I clothe my naked villany

With odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ.

And in Hamlet :—

⁴ Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep.

Again, in Jonson's Volpone :—

⁵ Forth the resolved corners of his eyes.

⁶ No passengers? nobody going by? So in the Comedy of Errors :—

⁷ Now in the stirring passage of the day.

A passenger anciently signified a passage-boat or vessel, and could not therefore be used in its modern sense without an equivocal.

⁸ I. e. a thick cloudy night.

⁹ This phrase, to cry on, for cry out on, has already occurred in Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2.

¹⁰ This speech is not in the first quarto.

¹¹ Thus the folio. The quarto 1622 reads—to bear a part in this.

¹² This passage incontestably proves that Iago was meant for a Venetian.

⁹ Thus the folio. The quarto reads—Stay you, good gentlewoman. It seems probable that Iago addresses Lodovico and Gratiano, who are going away to assist Cassio, and to see him properly taken care of. The subsequent appeal and address of Iago to them appears to confirm this supposition. Malone follows the quarto, and defends the reading of it.

¹⁰ The quarto, instead of gastness, reads features, and instead of stare, in the next line, has stirre.

¹¹ So in Hamlet :—

¹² For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak,
With most miraculous organ.

In the second scene of the preceding act Iago informs Roderigo that Cassio was to sup with Bianca ; that he would go to him there, and bring him away between twelve and one. Indeed Cassio had himself told Iago that he would sup with Bianca, and Iago had promised to meet him at her house. We must suppose, therefore, that this consummate villain thought it more secure to waylay him, as we find he does, without actually joining him at supper time. Otherwise Bianca would surely have answered :—

'Why, you well know
He supp'd,' &c.

Bian. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with me.

Emil. Fie, fie upon thee, strumpet!

Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest, As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As I? foh! fie upon thee!

Iago. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dress'd:—

Come, mistress, you must tell us another tale.—

Emilia, run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what has happ'd.—

Will you go on, I pray;—This is the night, [Aside. That either makes me, or fordoes me quite.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Bedchamber: DESDEMONA in Bed asleep. A Light burning. Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,

Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!²—

It is the cause.—Yet I'll not shed her blood;

Nor scar that whiter skin of her's than snow,

And smooth as monumental alabaster.

[Takes off his Sword.]

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.

Put out the light, and then—Put out the light!³

If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,

I can again thy former light restore,

Should I repent me:—but once put out thine,⁴

Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat,

That can thy light relume.⁵ When I have pluck'd thy rose,

I cannot give it vital growth again,

It needs must wither:—I'll smell it on the tree.—

[Kissing her.]

O, balmy breath, that dost almost persuade

Justice to break her sword!—One more, one more.—

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,

And love thee after:—One more, and this the last:

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,

But they are cruel tears; This sorrow's heavenly;

It strikes where it doth love.—She wakes—

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth. Ay, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des. Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you bethink yourself of any crime,

Unreconcil'd as yet to heaven and grace,

Solicit for it straight.

Steevens suggests that as the former line is imperfect, some such words may have been accidentally omitted. His other supposition, 'perhaps the poet was unwilling that Bianca should say, in the presence of Iago's wife, that he too had been of the supper party,' is much less probable.

1 To for do is to undo, to ruin, to destroy. So in Hamlet:—

'— Did with desperate hand
For do its own life.'

2 Othello, full of horror at the cruel action which he is about to perpetrate, seems at this instant to be seeking his justification, from representing to himself the cause, i. e. the greatness of the provocation he had received.

3 The old copy gives this line thus:—

'Put out the light, and then put out the light.'

The present regulation of the passage, by which so much beauty and spirit is added to it, was proposed by Mr. Upton, but it is to be found in Ayre's Life of Pope; it may therefore have originated with Warburton, who thus explains it:—

'The meaning is, I will put out the light, and then proceed to the execution of my purpose. But the expression of putting out the light, bringing to mind the effects of the extinction of the light of life, he breaks short, and questions himself about the effects of this metaphorical extinction, introduced by a repetition of his first words, as much as to say,—But hold, let me first weigh the reflection which this expression naturally excites.'

Dr. Farmer treats this as a refinement of Warburton's, observing that to put out the light was a phrase for to kill. Malone stoutly combats on the same side, but his arguments have not convinced me, and I have therefore followed Warburton's arrangement. Mr. Boswell would have done so if he could have used his own discretion. 'I have felt bound, (says he) to print

Des. Alas, my lord, what may you mean by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by:

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;

No,—Heaven forbid!—I would not kill thy soul.'

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth. Ay, I do.

Des. Then, heaven

Have mercy on me!

Oth. Amen, with all my heart!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Humph!

Des. And yet I fear you: for you are fatal then,

When your eyes roll so: Why I should fear, I know not,

Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel, I fear.

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des. They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural, that kills for loving.⁸—

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?

Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:

These are portents; but yet, I hope, I hope,

They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still!

Des. I will so: What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief, which I so lov'd, and gave thee,

Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul;

Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed,

Take heed of perjury; Thou'rt on thy death-bed.

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth. Yes, presently:

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;

For to deny each article with oath,

Cannot remove, nor choke the strong conception,

That I do groan withal. Thou art to die.

Des. Then, Lord have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too! I never did

Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio,

But with such general warranty of heaven

As I might love: I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in his hand.

O, perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,

And mak'st me call, what I intend to do,—

(A murder which I thought),—a sacrifice:⁹

I saw the handkerchief.

the text according to Mr. Malone's opinion; but if Warburton's explanation be an error, it is demptus per vim, I for one am very sorry to part with it. Broken sentences, as Mr. Malone has more than once observed, are very much in our poet's manner, and are surely natural in the perturbed state of Othello's mind. I am unwilling to persuade myself that a regulation of the text which contains so much beauty could be merely the refinement of a critic, and that our great author, in one of his most highly-wrought scenes, instead of it, intended nothing but a cold conceit.

4 Thus the quarto. The folio reads—put out thy light. Steevens adopted the present reading for the sake of the measure, and to avoid the useless repetition of the word light.

5 Thus the folio. The first quarto—returne: the second quarto—re-lumine.

6 This image seems to be derived from Scripture:—'Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth.'

7 Davenant has borrowed this thought in his Law of Lombardy:—

'I am not fraught with the devil's spleen; I would not hurt thy soul.'

Othello seems to have been a favourite with his author; for he has bestowed on him that piety he has refused to Hamlet.—Steevens.

8 This thought is likewise found in The Legend of Orpheus and Euridice, by H. L. 1597:—

'Unnatural, that kill where you should kiss.'

And in King Richard III.:

'It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.'

9 'This line is difficult. Thou hast hardened my heart, and makest me kill thee with the rage of a murderer, when I thought to have sacrificed thee to justice

Des. He found it, then ;
I never gave it him :—Send for him hither,
And let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord ?

Oth. That he hath—us'd thee.¹

Des. How ? unlawfully ?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He'll not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd ;

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.

Des. My fear interprets, then,—What, is he dead ?

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives,² my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas ! he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet ! Weep'st thou for him to my face ?

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Down, strumpet !

Des. Kill me to-morrow, let me live to-night.

Oth. Nay, if you strive,—

Des. But half an hour.

Oth. Being done,

There is no pause.³

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late.⁴ [He smothers her.]

Emil. [Within.] My lord, my lord ! what ho !
my lord ! my lord !

Oth. What noise is this ?—Not dead ? not yet quite dead ?

I, that am cruel, am yet merciful ;
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—
So, so.⁵

Emil. [Within.] What ho ! my lord, my lord !

Oth. Who's there ?

Emil. [Within.] O, good my lord, I would speak
a word with you.

Oth. Yes ;—'tis Emilia :—by and by.—She's dead.

'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death :
The noise was high.—Ha ! no more moving ?
Still as the grave. Shall she come in ? Were't good ?
I think, she stirs again :—No.—What's the best ?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife :
My wife ! my wife ! what wife ?—I have no wife :
O, insupportable ! O, heavy hour !⁷
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon : and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.

Emil. [Within.] I do beseech you I may speak
with you,

O, good my lord !

Oth. I had forgot thee : O, come in, Emilia :—

with the calmness of a priest striking a victim.—Johnson. There is a second attempt at explanation by Johnson, adopting the reading of one of the quartos—
'thou dost stone thy heart,' still less successful than the above. The obvious sense of the passage is—'Thou dost harden my heart, and mak'st me now call what I intend to do,—and which I before thought murder,—a sacrifice only.' The difficulty consists in the inverted phrase—
'a murder which I thought'—being parenthetical. The passage has been hitherto absurdly pointed. Johnson exclaims—'I am glad that I have ended this dreadful scene. It is not to be endured.'

1 The quarto 1622 reads :—

'That he hath—us'd death.'

2 This thought appears to have been common :—

'Know, Caesar, had I now as many lives

As there are stones, or hairs upon my head,

I would,' &c. The Devil's Charter, 1607.

Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's King and No King, produced in 1611 :—

'—but if all

My hairs were lives, I would be engaged
In such a cause.'

3 The first quarto omits this speech.

4 After this speech of Othello, the elder quarto adds an invocation from Desdemona, consisting only of the sacred name thrice repeated. The statute of the 3d of James I. c. 21, against the profane use of the name of God, &c. was highly necessary, for many of the old plays abound in the most wanton and shocking profa-

Soft,—by and by :—Let me the curtains draw.—
Where art thou ? What's the matter with thee now ?
[Unlocks the door.]

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. O, good my lord, yonder's foul murder done.

Oth. What ? now ?

Emil. But now, my lord !

Oth. It is the very error of the moon ;
She comes more near the earth than she was wont ;
And makes men mad.⁸

Emil. Cassio, my lord, has kill'd a young Venetian,
Call'd—Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd !

And Cassio kill'd ?

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd ? Then murder's out of tune,
And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd !

Emil. Alas ! what cry is that ?

Oth. That ! what ?

Emil. Out, and alas ! that was my lady's voice :—

Help ! help, ho ! help !—O lady, speak again !

Sweet Desdemona ! O, sweet mistress, speak !

Des. A guiltless death I die.

Emil. O, who hath done
this deed ?

Des. Nobody ; I myself ; farewell :

Commend me to my kind lord ; O, farewell. [Dies.]

Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd ?

Emil. Alas, who knows ?

Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.

Emil. She said so ; I must needs report the truth.

Oth. She's like a liar, gone to burning hell ;
'Twas I that kill'd her.

Emil. O, the more angel she,
And you the blacker devil !

Oth. She turn'd to folly,⁹ and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.

Oth. She was false as water.¹⁰

Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false ; O, she was heavenly true !

Oth. Cassio did tup her ; ask thy husband else.

O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,
But that I did proceed upon just grounds

To this extremity ; Thy husband knew it all.

Emil. My husband ?

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to wedlock ?

Oth. Ay, with Cassio.

Nay, had she been true,
If heaven would make me such another world

Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,¹¹

I'd not have sold her for it.

nations of a name which never ought to be mentioned in such an irreverend manner on the stage.

5 It is supposed that some theatrical direction has been omitted, and that, when Othello says, 'So, so,' he then stabs her. After the repetition of wounds, Desdemona might speak again with propriety, and yet very soon expire.

6 Filius unicus adolescentulum

Habeo : ah ! quid dixi habere me ? imo habui, Chreme.⁷ Terent. Heautont.

7 Stevens seems to think the use of the epithet heavy hour here unusual. Surely there is nothing more common. Heavy, sad, and grievous are synonymous with all our old writers.

8 'On my fayth I thinke the moone be at the full,
For frantique fancies be then most plentiful.'

The Play of the Wether, by John Heywood.

9 Folly signifies here, as in the sacred writings, wantonness, unchastity. See Deuteronomy, xxii. 21. So in the Rape of Lucrece :—

'Her sad behaviour feeds his culture folly.'

10 i. e. as unstable, as deceitful. In Genesis, xlix.
Jacob applies a similar term to Reuben :—'Thou wast light as water.'

11 Pliny informs us that Ptolemy Philadelphus had a statue of his wife Arsinoe, made of one topas, four cubits in length.—Hist. Nat. b. xxxvii. c. 8. Dr. Clarke, in his Lectures on Mineralogy, says he used topas and chrysolite as synonymous terms. Perhaps Shakspeare alludes to this story.—Plumtree.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. Ay, 'twas he that told me first;¹
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. What needs this iterance,² woman! I say, thy husband!—

Emil. O, mistress, villany hath made mocks with love!³—

My husband say, that she was false?

Oth. He, woman.
I say, thy husband: Dost understand the word?

My friend, thy husband, honest, honest, Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day! he lies to the heart;
She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha!

Emil. Do thy worst:
This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.
Emil. Thou hast not half the power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt.⁴ O, gull! O dolt!
As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed,—
I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known,
Though I lost twenty lives:—Help! help ho! help!
The Moor has kill'd my mistress: Murder! murder!

Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, and IAGO.

Mon. What is the matter?—How now, general?

Emil. O, are you come, Iago? you have done
well,

That men must lay their murders on your neck.

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou beest a man:
He says, thou told'st him that his wife was false;
I know, thou didst not, thou'rt not such a villain;
Speak, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no
more

Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him, she was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a lie: an odious damned lie;
Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie:—
She false with Cassio!—Did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, mistress; Go to, charm your tongue.⁵

¹ The folio reads—that told me on her first.

² The quarto reads—iteration. The two next speeches are omitted in that copy.

³ Villany hath taken advantage to play upon the weakness of a violent passion.

⁴ More can I bear than you dare execute.

This line, from the Second Part of King Henry VI.
is one of those attributable to Shakspeare, and explains
Emilia's sentiment. There is a similar idea in King
Henry VIII. Act iii. Sc. 2.

⁵ To charm is to conjure, to enchant, to lay or still as with a charm. So in King Henry V.:

‘——— Charming the narrow seas

To give you gentle pass.’

Pliny informs us that favete linguis was the constant exclamation before any charm was applied. From this circumstance the phrase to charm a tongue, may have originated. So in The Tempest:—

‘Hush, be mute,

Or else our spell is marr'd.’

⁶ This line, and the six following speeches, are wanting in the first quarto.

⁷ That is, at the instant when she gave Desdemona's handkerchief to Iago: for even then Emilia appears to have suspected it was sought after for no honest purpose, and therefore asks her husband—‘What will you do with it?’ &c. See Act iii. Sc. 2.

⁸ So in Shakspeare's 144th Sonnet:—

‘——— My female evil

Tempteth my better angel from my side.’

⁹ The first and the second folio both read—reprobance.

¹⁰ Dr. Johnson thinks that this and other passages in the play seem to suppose a longer space comprised in the action of this play than the scene includes. Mr.
Tollet has adduced several instances in support of this opinion, as that in Act iii. Sc. 3:—

Emil. I will not charm my tongue: I am bound to speak;

My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed.⁶

All. O, heavens, forefend!

Emil. And your reports have set the murder on.

Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed.

Gra. 'Tis a strange truth.

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil. Villany, villany, villany!—

I think upon't,—I think,—I smell't;—O, villany!

I thought so then;—'Pll kill myself for grief.—

O, villany, villany!

Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you home.

Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak;

'Tis proper I obey him, but not now:—

Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

Oth. O! O! O! [Hanging over his wife.

Emil. Nay, lay thee down, and roar;

For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,

That e'er did lift up eye.

Oth. O, she was foul!—[Rising.

I scarce did know you, uncle: There lies your niece,

Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd:

I know, this act shows horrible and grim.

Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's dead;

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief

Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now,

This sight would make him do a desperate turn,

Yea, curse his better angel from his side,⁷

And fall to reprobation.⁸

Oth. 'Tis pitiful: but yet Iago knows,

That she with Cassio hath the act of shame

A thousand times committed;⁹ Cassio confess'd it:

And she did gratify his amorous works

With that recognizance and pledge of love

Which I first gave her; I saw it in his hand;

It was a handkerchief, an antique token

My father gave my mother.¹⁰

Emil. O, heaven! O, heavenly powers!

Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out;—I hold my peace,
sir? no;

No, I will speak as liberal¹² as the air;

¹¹ I slept the next night well, was free and merry,

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.'

On Othello's wedding night, he and Cassio embarked from Venice, where Desdemona was left under the care of Iago. They all met at Cyprus; and since their arrival there, the scenes include only one night, the night of the celebration of their nuptials. What night was there to intervene between Cassio's kisses and Othello's sleeping the next night well? Iago has said,

‘I lay with Cassio lately,’ which he could not well have done, unless they had been longer at Cyprus than is represented in the play; nor could Cassio have kept away for the space of a whole week from Bianca.

Stevens obviates one objection, by supposing that what Othello mentions might have passed before he was married to Desdemona, when Cassio went between them, and that a thousand times is only an aggravated term for many times. The difficulties started by Mr.

Tollet he is unable to explain.

¹² Othello tells his wife, Act iii. Sc. 4:—

‘——— That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give.’

This passage, therefore, has been censured as an oversight in the poet; but perhaps it exhibits only a fresh proof of his art. The first account of the handkerchief, as given by Othello, was purposely ostentatious, in order to alarm his wife the more. When he mentions it a second time, the truth was sufficient for his purpose.

—Stevens.

¹² The folio reads—

‘I'll be in speaking liberal as the north.’

The quarto 1622—‘liberal as the air.’ The text is formed out of the two copies. Liberal here means free.
So in Jeronimo, l. e. the first part of The Spanish Tragedy, 1605:—

‘Now let your bloods be liberal as the sea.’

Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil.

I will not.

[Iago offers to stab his Wife.]

Fie!

Gra.

Your sword upon a woman?

Emil. O, thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of,

I found by fortune, and did give my husband;

For often, with a solemn earnestness,

(More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,)

He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago.

Villanous whore!

Emil. She give it Cassio! no, alas; I found it,
And I did give't my husband.

Iago.

Filth, thou liest.

Emil. By heaven, I do not; I do not, gentlemen;

O, murd'rous coxcomb! what should such a fool

Do with so good a wife?

[Iago stabs EMILIA, then runs out.]

Oth.

Are there no stones in heaven,
But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!

Gra. The woman falls; sure, he has kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay; O, lay me by my mistress' side!

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this weapon,

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:

Come, guard the door without: let him not pass,

But kill him rather; I'll after that same villain,

For 'tis a damned slave.

[Exeunt MONTANO and GRATIANO.]

Oth.

I am not valiant, neither,

But every puny whipster gets my sword:—

But why should honour outlive honesty?

Let it go all.

Emil.

What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,

And die in music:¹—Willow, willow, willow.—

Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel Moor;

So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;

So speaking as I think, I die,—I die.

[Dies.]

Oth.

I have another weapon in this chamber,

It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper;²

O, here it is:—Uncle, I must come forth.

Gra. [Within.]

If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear;

Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth.

Look in upon me, then, and speak with me,
Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter GRATIANO.

Gra. What is the matter?

Oth.

Behold! I have a weapon;

A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day,

That, with this little arm, and this good sword,

I have made my way through more impediments

Than twenty times your stop:³—But, O, vain boast!

Who can control his fate? 'tis not so now.—

Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd;

Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,

And very seamark of my utmost sail.

Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear;

Man but a rush against Othello's breast,

And he retires;—Where should Othello go?—

1 The meaning appears to be:—'Has not heaven one supernatural bolt, to hurl directly at the head of this atrocious villain?'

2 So in the Merchant of Venice:—

'—he makes a swanlike end,

Fading in music.'

3 The particular name of the ice-brook may be determined from several passages in Martial. (See lib. i. ep. 50, lib. iv. ep. 55.) It was undoubtedly the brook or rivulet called Salo (now Xalon) near Bilbills in Celtiberia. In this the Spaniards plunged all their swords and other weapons while hot from the forge; and to the icy quality of the waters they were supposed to be indebted for their stubborn temper. See also Justin, l. 44. It should be remembered that Spain was famous for producing the best sword blades.

Now, how dost thou look now? O, ill-starr'd wench!⁴

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven,

And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl?

Even like thy chastity.—

O, cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me, ye devils,

From the possession of this heavenly sight!

Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!

Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!—

O, Desdemona! Desdemona! dead?

Dead? O! O! O!

Enter LODOVICO, MONTANO, CASSIO, carried in a Chair, and Officers, with IAGO, prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

Oth. That's he, that was Othello; here I am.

Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet⁵—but that's a fable;

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[OTHELLO wounds IAGO.]

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Iago. I bleed, sir; but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry, neither; I'd have thee live;

For, in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.⁶

Lod. O, thou Othello, that was once so good,

Fall'n in the practice⁷ of a cursed slave,

What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, any thing:

An honourable murderer, if you will;

For naught I did in hate, but all in honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villany:

Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.

Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.

Will you, I pray you, demand that demi-devil,

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?

Iago. Demand me nothing: What you know, ye know:

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What? not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,

Which, as I think, you know not: Here is a letter,

Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo;

And here, another: the one of them imports

The death of Cassio to be undertook

By Roderigo,

Oth. O, villain!

Cas. Most heathenish, and most gross!

Lod. Now, here's another discontented paper,

Found in his pocket too: and this, it seems,

Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain;

But that, belike, Iago, in the interim,⁸

Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O, the pernicious caitiff!—

How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief

That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber.

And he himself confess'd, but even now,

That there he dropp'd it, for a special purpose,

Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O, fool! fool! fool!

Cas. There is, besides, in Roderigo's letter,—

How he upbraids Iago, that he made him

4 Thus in Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1:—

'—Cracking ten thousand curbs

Of more strong link asunder, than can ever

Appear in your impediment.'

5 This and the six preceding lines are omitted in the first quarto. Wench originally signified only a girl or young woman. It is so used in our old version of the Scriptures, and by many of our early writers.

6 To see if, according to the common opinion, his feet be cloven.

7 The same thought occurs in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'Tis well thou'rt gone,

If it be well to live.'

8 In the snare, by the stratagem.

9 The first quarto reads—'in the nick.'

Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast; And even but now he spake,
After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us;
Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,—
If there be any cunning cruelty,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his: You shall close prisoner rest,
Till that the nature of your fault be known
To the Venetian state:—Come, bring him away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two, before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know it;
No more of that:—I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am;¹ nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice: then must you speak
Of one, that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one, not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme; of one, whose hand,
Like the base Judean,² threw a pearl away, Richer than all his tribe; of one, whose subdu'd eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood;
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum: Set you down this:
And say, besides,—that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk³
Beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,
I took by the throat the circumcised dog,
And smote him—thus. [Stabs himself.]

Lod. O, bloody period!

Gra. All, that's spoke, is marr'd.
Oth. I kiss'd thee, ere I kill'd thee;—No way but this, [Falling upon DESDEMONA.]

Killing myself, to die upon a kiss. [Dies.]

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon;

For he was great of heart.

Lod. O, Spartan dog,⁴
More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea!
Look on the tragic loading of this udd; [To IAGO.]

This is thy work: the object poisons sight;—
Let it be hid. Gratiano, keep the house,
And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,
For they succeed to you.—To you, lord governor,
Remains the censure⁵ of this hellish villain;
The time, the place, the torture,—O, enforce it!
Myself will straight abroad; and, to the state,
This heavy act with heavy heart relate. [Exeunt.]

THE beauties of this play impress themselves so strongly upon the attention of the reader, that they can draw no aid from critical illustration. The fiery openness of Othello, magnanimous, artless, and credulous, boundless in his confidence, ardent in his affection, inflexible in his resolution, and obdurate in his revenge; the cool malignity of Iago, silent in his resentment, subtle in his designs, and studious at once of his interest and his vengeance; the soft simplicity of Desdemona, confident of merit, and conscious of innocence, her artless perseverance in her suit, and her slowness to suspect that she can be suspected, are such proofs of Shakspeare's skill in human nature, as,

I suppose, it is vain to seek in any modern writer.
The gradual progress which Iago makes in the Moor's conviction, and the circumstances which he employs to inflame him, are so artfully natural, that though it will perhaps not be said of him as he says of himself, that he is a man not easily jealous, yet we cannot but pity him, when at last we find him perplexed in the extreme.

There is always danger, lest wickedness, conjoined with abilities, should steal upon esteem, though it misses of approbation; but the character of Iago is conducted, that he is from the first scene to the last hated and despised.

Even the inferior characters of this play would be very conspicuous in any other piece, not only for their justness, but their strength. Cassio is brave, benevolent and honest, ruined only by his want of stubbornness to resist an insidious invitation. Rodrigo's suspicious credulity, and impatient submission to the cheats which he sees practised upon him, and which by persuasion he suffers to be repeated, exhibit a strong picture of a weak mind betrayed by unlawful desires to a false friend; and the virtue of Emilia is such as we often find, worn loosely, but not cast off, easy to commit small crimes, but quickened and alarmed at atrocious villanies.

The scenes from the beginning to the end are busy, varied by happy interchanges, and regularly promoting the progression of the story; and the narrative in the end, though it tells but what is known already, yet is necessary to produce the death of Othello.

Had the scene opened in Cyprus, and the preceding incidents been occasionally related, there had been little wanting to a drama of the most exact and scrupulous regularity. JOHNSON.

To Dr. Johnson's admirable and nicely discriminative character of Othello, it may seem unnecessary to make any addition; yet I cannot forbear to conclude our commentaries on this transcendent poet, with the fine eulogy which the judicious and learned Lowth has pronounced on him, with a particular reference to this tragedy, perhaps the most perfect of his works:—

In his viris [tragediæ Græcæ scilicet scriptoribus] accessio quæ in Philosophiæ erat Poetica facultas:
neque sane quisquam adhuc Poesin ad fastidium summa
ac culmen evertit, nisi qui prius in intima Philosophia artis suæ fundamenta jecerit.

and the facility with which they would part with them,
a circumstance to which two succeeding poets have alluded:—

So the unskilful Indian those bright gems
Which might add majesty to diadems,
Among the waves scatters.

Hubington—to Castara weeping.

Thus also in The Woman's Conquest, by Sir Robert Howard:—

Behold my queen—
Who with no more concern I'll cast away
Than Indians do a pearl, that never did know,
Its value.

Shakspeare himself connects India with pearls in Troilus and Cressida:—

Her bed is India, where she lies a pearl.

It is here figuratively used for a fair woman. I conclude with Mr. Boswell, that the arguments are strong in favour of Indian, the reading of the earliest copy.

3 It is said that it was immediate death for a Christian to strike a Turk in Aleppo.

those of the most fierce and savage kind.

5 i. e. judgment, the sentence.

1 Thus the folio. The quarto reads:—'Speak of them as they are.'

2 The quarto 1622 reads—Indian. The folio has Judean. Warburton, Theobald, and Dr. Farmer think that the allusion is to Herod, who in a fit of blind jealousy threw away such a jewel in his wife Mariamne.
Steevens admits the reading Judean, but thinks the allusion is not to the story of Herod, on account of the epithet base; and because 'the simile appears almost too opposite to be used on the occasion, and would be little more than bringing the fact into comparison with itself.' He thinks that the allusion is to the story of a Jew, who not being able to find a purchaser for a very large pearl at an immoderate price, publicly threw it into the sea at Venice. Malone once objected to Judean on account of the wrong accent, but subsequently changed his opinion, and thought the word tribe strongly favoured that reading. To this Mr. Boswell replies, that the word tribe was never alone peculiarly applicable to the Jews, but meant a kindred, and is constantly used at this day in speaking of a peculiar race or set of Indians. That the early travellers are full of descriptions of 'the pearled treasures' of the Indians, who may be called base on account of their ignorance, tari existimo, quam ab omnibus omnium Philosophorum scholis in simili argumento, est unquam disputatum. [Frælectio prima, edit. 1763, p. 8.]—Malone.

If by 'the most perfect' is meant the most regular of the foregoing plays, I subscribe to Mr. Malone's opinion; but if his words were designed to convey a more exalted praise, without a moment's hesitation I should transfer it to Macbeth.

It is true that the domestic tragedy of Othello affords room for a various and forcible display of character. The less familiar groundwork of Macbeth (as Dr. Johnson has observed) excludes the influence of peculiar dispositions. That exclusion, however, is recompensed by a loftier strain of poetry, and by events of higher rank; by supernatural agency, by the solemnities of incantation, by shades of guilt and horror deepening in their progress, and by visions of futurity selected in aid of hope, but eventually the ministers of despair.

Were it necessary to weigh the pathetic effusions of these dramas against each other, it is generally allowed that the sorrows of Desdemona would be more than counterbalanced by those of Macduff. Yet if our author's rival pieces (the distinct property of their subjects considered) are written with equal force, it must still be admitted that the latter has more of originality. A novel of considerable length (perhaps amplified and embellished by the English translator of it) supplied a regular and circumstantial outline for Othello; while a few slight hints collected from separate narratives of Holinshed, were expanded into the sublime and awful tragedy of Macbeth.

Should readers, who are alike conversant with the appropriate excellences of poetry and painting, pronounce on the reciprocal merits of these great productions, I must suppose that they would describe them as of different pedigrees. They would add, that one was of the school of Raphael, the other from that of Michael Angelo; and that if the steady Sophocles and Virgil should have decided in favour of Othello, the remonstrances of the daring Æschylus and Homer would have claimed the laurel for Macbeth.

To the sentiments of Dr. Lowth respecting the tragedy of Othello, a general eulogium on the dramatic works of Shakspeare, imputed by a judicious and amiable critic to Milton, may not improperly be subjoined:—

There is good reason to suppose (says my late friend the Rev. Thomas Warton) that Milton threw many additions and corrections into the Theatrum Poetarum, a book published by his nephew, Edward Philips, in 1675. It contains criticisms far above the taste of that period. Among these is the following judgment on Shakspeare, which was not then I believe the general opinion:—'In tragedy, never any expressed a more lofty and tragic height, never any represented nature more purely to the life; and where the polishments of art are most wanting, as probably his learning was not extraordinary, he pleases with a certain wild and native elegance.'—Milton's Minor Poems, p. 194, Note on b. Allegro.

What greater praise can any poet have received, than that of the author of Paradise Lost?

VENUS AND ADONIS.

The Epistle.

Vilia miretur vulgus, mihi flavus Apollo
Pocula Castalia plena ministret aqua.—Ovid.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,
Earl of Southampton and Baron of Titchfield.

RIGHT HONOURABLE :

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden : only, if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after ear so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content ; which I wish may always answer your own wish, and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honour's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

EVEN as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase ;
Hunting he lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn :
Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a bold-fac'd suitor 'gins to woo him.

Thrice fairer than myself, (thus she began,)
The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are ;
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith, that the world hath ending with thy life.

Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow ;
If thou wilt deign this favour, for thy meed
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know :
Here come and sit, where never serpent hisses,
And being set, I'll smother thee with kisses :

And yet not cloy thy lips with loath'd satiety,
But rather famish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety ;
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty :
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And, trembling in her passion, calls its balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good :
Being so enrag'd, desire doth lend her force,
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy ;
She red and hot, as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimble she fastens ; (O, how quick is love !)
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove :
Backward she push'd him, as she would be thrust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along, as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips :
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips :
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open.

He burns with bashful shame ; she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks ;
Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs,
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks :
He saith, she is immodest, blames her 'miss ;
What follows more, she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone
Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends, she doth anew begin.

Forc'd to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies, and breatheth in her face ;
She feedeth on the steam, as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace :
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies :
Pure shame and aw'd resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes :
Rain added to a river that is ran,
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale ;
Still is he sullen, still he low'rs and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame, and anger ashy-pale ;
Being red, she loves him best ; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love ;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears,
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet ;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive dapper peering through a wave,
Who being look'd on, ducks as quickly in ;
So offers he to give what she did crave ;
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat,
More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get ;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn :
O, pity, 'gan she cry, flint-hearted boy ;
'Tis but a kiss I beg ; why art thou coy ?

I have been woo'd as I entreat thee now,
 Even by the stern and dreadful god of war ;
 Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
 Who conquers where he comes, in every jar ;
 Yet hath been my captive and my slave,
 And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
 His batter'd shield, his uncontrolled crest,
 And for my sake hath learn'd to sport and dance,
 To toy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest ;
 Scorning his churlish drum, and ensign red,
 Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

Thus he that over-ru'd, I oversway'd,
 Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain :
 Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obey'd,
 Yet was he servile to my coy disdain,
 O, be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
 For mastering her that foil'd the god of fight.

Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,
 (Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red,)
 The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine ;—
 What see'st thou in the ground ? hold up thy head ;
 Look in mine eye-balls, there thy beauty lies :
 Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes ?

Art thou asham'd to kiss ? then wink again,
 And I will wink ; so shall the day seem night ;
 Love keeps his revels where there are but twain ;
 Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight ;
 These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean,
 Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
 Shows thee unripe ; yet may'st thou well be tasted ;
 Make use of time, let not advantage slip ;
 Beauty within itself should not be wasted :
 Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime,
 Rot and consume themselves in little time.

Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
 Ill-nurtur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
 O'er-worn, despised, rheumatic, and cold,
 Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice,
 Then might'st thou pause, for then I were not for
 thee ;

But having no defects, why dost abhor me ?

Thou can'st not see one wrinkle in my brow ;
 Mine eyes are grey,¹ and bright, and quick in turning ;
 My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
 My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning ;
 My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
 Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
 Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
 Or, like a nymph, with long dishevell'd hair,
 Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen :
 Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
 Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.

Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie ;
 These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me ;
 Two strengthless doves will draw me thro' the sky,
 From morn till night, even where I list to sport me ;
 Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
 That thou should'st think it heavy unto thee ?

Is thine own heart to thine own face affected ?
 Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left ?
 Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
 Steal thine own freedom, and complain on theft,
 Narcissus, so, himself himself forsook,
 And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
 Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use ;
 Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear ;
 Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse :
 Seeds spring from seeds, and beauty breedeth beauty ;

Thou wast begot,—to get, it is thy duty.

Upon the earth's increase why should'st thou feed,
 Unless the earth with thy increase be fed ?
 By law of nature thou art bound to breed,
 That thine may live, when thou thyself art dead ;
 And so, in spite of death, thou dost survive,
 In that thy likeness still is left alive.

By this, the love-sick queen began to sweat,
 For, where they lay, the shadow had forsook them,
 And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
 With burning eye did hotly overlook them ;
 Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
 So he were like him, and by Venus' side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
 And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
 His low'ring brows o'er-whelming his fair sight,
 Like misty vapours, when they blot the sky,—
 Sourcing his cheeks, cries, Fie, no more of love ;
 The sun doth burn my face ; I must remove.

Ah me, (quoth Venus,) young, and so unkind ?
 What bare excuses mak'st thou to be gone ?
 I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
 Shall cool the heat of this descending sun ;
 I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs ;
 If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears.

The sun that shines from heaven, shines but warm,
 And lo, I lie between that sun and thee ;
 The heat I have from thence doth little harm,
 Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me :
 And were I not immortal, life were done,
 Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel,
 Nay more than flint, for stone at rain relenteth ?
 Art thou a woman's son, and canst not feel
 What 'tis to love ? how want of love tormenteth
 O, had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
 She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

What am I, that thou should'st contemn me this ?
 Or what great danger dwells upon my suit ?
 What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss ?
 Speak, fair ; but speak fair words, or else be mute :
 Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again,
 And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
 Well-painted idol, image, dull and dead,
 Statue, contenting but the eye alone,
 Thing like a man, but of no woman bred ;
 Thou art no man, though of a man's complexion,
 For men will kiss even by their own direction.

This said, impatience chokes her pleading tongue,
 And swelling passion doth provoke a pause ;
 Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong ;
 Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause :
 And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
 And now her sobs do her intendments break.

Sometimes she shakes her head, and then his hand,
 Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground ;
 Sometimes her arms infold him like a band ;
 She would, he will not in her arms be bound :
 And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
 She locks her lily fingers, one in one.

Fondling, she saith, since I have hemm'd thee here,
 Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
 I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer ;
 Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale :
 Graze on my lips ; and, if those hills be dry,
 Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

Within this limit is relief enough,
 Sweet bottom-grass, and high delightful plain,
 Round rising hillocks, brakes, obscure and rough,
 To shelter thee from tempest and from rain ;
 Then be my deer, since I am such a park ;
 No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark.

At this Adonis smiles, as in disdain,
 That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple :
 Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
 He might be buried in a tomb so simple ;
 Fore-knowing well, if there he came to lie,
 Why there Love liv'd, and there he could not die.

1 'Mine eyes are grey.' What we now call blue eyes, were, in Shakespeare's time, called grey eyes, and were considered as eminently beautiful.—Malone.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking:
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second striking?
Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
Her words are done, her woes the more increasing;
The time is spent, her object will away,
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing:
Pity,—(she cries) some favour,—some remorse;—
Away he springs, and hasteth to his horse.

But lo, from forth a copse that neighbours by,
A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud,
Adonis' trampling courser doth espy,
And forth she rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud:
The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder;
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thun-
The iron bit he crusheth 'tween his teeth, [der];
Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up-prick'd; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapours doth he send:
His eye, which scornfully glisters like fire,
Shows his hot courage, and his high desire.

Sometime he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty, and modest pride;
Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps,
As who should say, Lo! thus my strength is try'd;
And this I do, to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering holla, or his Stand, I say?
What cares he now for curb, or pricking spur?
For rich caparisons, or trapping gay?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In limning out a well-proportion'd steed,
His art with nature's workmanship at strife
As if the dead the living should exceed;
So did this horse excel a common one,
In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long,
Broad breast, full eye, small head, and nostril wide,
High crest, short ears, strait legs, and passing strong,
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide:
Look what a horse should have, he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometime he scuds far off, and there he stares;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather;
To bid the wind a base he now prepares,
And wher' he run, or fly, they know not whether;
For through his mane and tail the high wind sings,
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love, and neighs unto her;
She answers him, as to she knew his mind:
Being proud, as females are, if see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind;
Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels,
Beating his kind embracements with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malecontent,
He vails his tail, that, like a falling plume
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent;
He stamps, and bites the poor flies in his fume:
His love perceiving how he is enrag'd,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuag'd.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad, unto the wood they hie them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them.

All swoln with chasing, down Adonis sits,
Banning his boist'rous and unruly beast;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love, by pleading may be blest;
For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong,
When it is barr'd the aidance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage.
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage,
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
(Even as a dying coal revives with wind,)
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind;
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all askaunce he holds her in his eye.

O, what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue!
How white and red each other did destroy!
But now, her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels:
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels:
His tend'r'r cheek receives her soft hand's print,
As apt as new-fall'n snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes suing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them,
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing:
And all this dumb play had his acts made plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
Shew'd like two silver doves that sit a billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began;
O, fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound;
For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee,
Though nothing but my body's bane would cure thee.

Give me my hand, saith he, why dost thou feel it?
Give me my heart, saith she, and thou shalt have it;
O, give it me, lest thy hard heart do steal it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.

For shame, he cries, let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so;
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.

Thus she replies: Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire.
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none;
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

Who sees his true love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold,
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy ;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy ;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee :
O ! learn to love ; the lesson is but plain,
And, once made perfect, never lost again.

I know not love, (quoth he,) nor will not know it,
Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it ;
'Tis much to borrow, and I will not owe it ;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it ;
For I have heard it is a life in death,
That laughs, and weeps, and all but with a breath.

Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinished ?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth ?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth :
The colt that's back'd and burthen'd being young,
Loseth his pride, and never waxeth strong.

You hurt my hand with wringing ; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat :
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart ;
To love's alarm it will not ope the gate :
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery ;
For where a heart is hard, they make no battery.

What ! canst thou talk, quoth she, hast thou a tongue ?
O, would thou had'st not, or I had no hearing !
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double wrong ;
I had my load before, now press'd with bearing :
Melodious discord, heavenly tune harsh-sounding,
Ear's deep sweet music, and heart's deep-sore-wounding.

Had I no eyes, but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible,
Or, were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible :
Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
Yet should I be in love, by touching thee.

Say, that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much ;
For from the still'tory of thy face excell'ng [ing.
Comes breath perfum'd, that breedeth love by smell-

But O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four !
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double lock the door ?
Lest Jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast.

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield ;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field,
Sorrow to shepherds, wo unto the birds,
Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisedly she marketh :—
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it staineth,
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her, ere his words begun.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks kill love, and love by looks reviveth :
A smile recures the wounding of a frown ;
But blessed bankrupt, that by love so thriveth !
The silly boy believing she is dead,
Claps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red ;

And all-amaz'd brake off his late intent,
For sharply he did think to reprehend her,
Which cunning love did wittily prevent :
Fair fall the wit, that can so well defend her !
For on the grass she lies, as she were slain,
Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard ;
He chafes her lips ; a thousand ways he seeks
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd ;

He kisses her ; and she, by her good will,
Would never rise, so he will kiss her still.

The night of sorrow now is turn'd to day :
Her two blue windows faintly she up-heaveth,
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
He cheers the morn, and all the world relieveth :
And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
So is her face illum'd with her eye ;

Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd
As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his brows' repine ;
But hers, which through the crystal tears gave light,
Shone like the moon, in water seen by night.

O, where am I ? quoth she, in earth or heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire ?
What hour is this ? or morn or weary even ?
Do I delight to die, or life desire ?
But now I liv'd, and life was death's annoy ;
But now I died, and death was lively joy.

O, thou didst kill me ;—kill me once again :
Thy eye's shrewd tutor, that hard heart of thine,
Hath taught them scornful tricks, and such disdain,
That they have murder'd this poor heart of mine ;
And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

Long may they kiss each other for this cure !

O, never let their crimson liveries wear !
And as they last, their verdure still endure,
To drive infection from the dangerous year !
That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
May say, the plague is banish'd by thy breath.
Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
What bargains may I make, still to be sealing ?
To sell myself I can be well contented,
So thou wilt buy, and pay, and use good dealing,
Which purchase if thou make, for fear of slips
Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

A thousand kisses buys my heart from me ;
And pay them at thy leisure, one by one.
What is ten hundred touches unto thee ?
Are they not quickly told and quickly gone ?
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double ;
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble ?

Fair queen, quoth he, if any love you owe me,
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years ;
Before I know myself seek not to know me ;
No fisher but the ungrown fry forbears :
The mellow plumb doth fall, the green sticks fast,
Or being early pluck'd, is sour to taste.

Look, the world's comforter, with weary gait,
His day's hot task hath ended in the west :
The owl, night's herald, shrieks, 'tis very late ;
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest ;
And coal-black clouds, that shadow heaven's light,
Do summon us to part, and bid good night.

Now let me say good night, and so say you ;
If you will say so, you shall have a kiss.

Good night, quoth she ; and ere he says adieu.

The honey fee of parting tender'd is :
Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace ;

Incorporate then they seem ; face grows to face.

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
Whereon they surfeit, yet complain on drought ;
He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dearth,
(Their lips together glue'd,) fall to the earth.

Now quick Desire hath caught the yielding prey,
And glutton-like she feeds, yet never filleth ;

1 'To drive infection from the dangerous year.'—I have somewhere read, that in rooms where plants are kept in a growing state, the air is never unwholesome.—Steevens.

2 'Say for non-payment that the debt should double.'—It was once usual when a sum of money, secured by bond, remained unpaid at the prescribed time, to leave the lender at liberty to recover twice the amount.—Malone.

Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
 Paying what ransom the insulter willet :
 Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so high,
 That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
 With blindfold fury she begins to forage ;
 Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
 And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage ;
 Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
 Forgetting shame's pure blush, and honour's wreck.
 Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
 Like a wild bird being tam'd with too much handling,
 Or as the fleet-foot roe, that's tir'd with chasing,
 Or like the froward infant, still'd with dandling,
 He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
 While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What wax so frozen, but dissolves with temp'ring,
 And yields at last to every light impression ?
 Things out of hope are compass'd oft with vent'ring,
 Chiefly in love, whose leave exceeds commission :
 Affection faints not like a pale-fac'd coward,
 But then woos best, when most his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O, had she then gave over,
 Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
 Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover ;
 What though the rose have prickles, yet 'tis pluck'd :
 Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
 Yet love breaks through, and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him ;
 The poor fool prays her that he may depart :
 She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him ;
 Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart ;
 The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
 He carries thence incaged in his breast.

Sweet boy, she says, this night I'll waste in sorrow,
 For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
 Tell me, Love's master, shall we meet to-morrow ?
 Say, shall we ? shall we ? wilt thou make the match ?
 He tells her, no ; to-morrow he intends
 To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

The boar ! (quoth she) whereat a sudden pale,
 Like lawn being spread upon the blushing rose,
 Usurps her cheek ; she trembles at his tale,
 And on his neck her yoking arms she throws :
 She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
 He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
 Her champion mounted for the hot encounter :
 All is imaginary she doth prove,
 He will not manage her although he mount her ;
 That worse than Tantalus³ is her annoy,
 To clip Elysium, and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,³
 Do surfeit by the eye, and pine the maw,
 Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
 As those poor birds that helpless berries saw :
 The warm effects which she in him finds missing,
 She seeks to kindle with continual kissing :

But all in vain ; good queen, it will not be :
 She hath assay'd as much as may be prov'd ;
 Her pleading hath deserv'd a greater fee ;
 She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd.
 Fie, fie, he says, you crush me ; let me go ;
 You have no reason to withhold me so.

Thou had'st been gone, quoth she, sweet boy, ere
 this,
 But that thou told'st me, thou would'st hunt the boar.
 O, be advis'd : thou know'st not what it is
 With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
 Whose tusches never sheath'd, he whetteth still,
 Like to a mortal butcher, bent to kill.

On his bow-back he hath a battle set
 Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes ;

His eyes, like glow-worms, shine when he doth fret ;
 His snout digs sepulchres where'er he goes ;
 Being mov'd, he strikes what e'er is in his way,
 And whom he strikes, his cruel tusches slay.

His brawny sides, with hairy bristles arm'd,
 Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter ;
 His short thick neck cannot be easily harm'd ;
 Being ireful, on the lion he will venture :
 The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
 As fearful of him, part ; through whom he rushes.

Alas, he nought esteems that face of thine,
 To which Love's eyes pay tributary gazes ;
 Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eyne,
 Whose full perfection all the world amazes ;
 But having thee at vantage, (wondrous dread !)
 Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still ;
 Beauty hath nought to do with such foul fiends :
 Come not within his danger by thy will ;
 They that thrive well, take counsel of their friends ;
 When thou didst name the boar, not to dissemble,
 I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

Did'st thou not mark my face ? Was it not white ?
 Saw'st thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye ?
 Grew I not faint ? And fell I not downright ?
 Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
 My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no rest,
 But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my breast.

For where love reigns, disturbing jealousy
 Doth call himself affection's sentinel ;
 Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
 And in a peaceful hour doth cry, kill, kill ;
 Distemp'ring gentle love in his desire,
 As air and water do abate the fire.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy,
 This canker, that eats up love's tender spring,
 This carry-tale, dissentious jealousy, [bring,
 That sometimes true news, sometimes false doth
 Knocks at my heart, and whispers in mine ear,
 That if I love thee, I thy death should fear :

And more than so, presenteth to mine eye
 The picture of an angry chafing boar,
 Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth he
 An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore ;
 Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed,
 Doth make them droop with grief, and hang the head.

What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
 That tremble at the imagination ?
 The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
 And fear doth teach it divination :
 I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
 If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

But if thou needs wilt hunt, be rul'd by me
 Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
 Or at the fox, which lives by subtlety,
 Or at the roe, which no encounter dare :
 Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
 And on thy well-breath'd horse keep with thy hounds.

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
 Mark the poor wretch, to overshut his troubles,
 How he out-runs the wind, and with what care
 He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles :
 The many musits through the which he goes,
 Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Sometimes he runs among a flock of sheep,
 To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell ;
 And sometime where earth-delving conies keep,
 To stop the loud pursuers in their yell ;
 And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer ;
 Danger deviseth shifts ; wit waits on fear :

For there his smell with others being mingled,
 The hot-scent snuffing hounds are driven to doubt ;
 Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
 With much ado the cold fault cleanly out ;
 Then do they spend their mouths : Echo replies,
 As if another chase were in the skies.

By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
 Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,

³ Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes.
 —An allusion to a picture of Zeuxis, mentioned by Pliny, in which some grapes were so well represented, that birds lighted on them to pick at them.—Stevens.

To hearken if his foes pursue him still ;
 Anon their loud alarms he doth hear ;
 And now his grief may be compared well
 To one sore sick, that hears the passing bell.
 Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbed wretch
 Turn, and return, indenting with the way ;
 Each envious briar his weary legs doth scratch,
 Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur stay :
 For misery is trodden on by many,
 And being low, never reliev'd by any.
 Lie quietly, and hear a little more ;
 Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise :
 To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
 Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize,
 Applying this to that, and so to so ;
 For love can comment upon every wo.
 Where did I leave ?—No matter where, quoth he ;
 Leave me, and then the story aptly ends :
 The night is spent. Why, what of that ? quoth she :
 I am, quoth he, expected of my friends ;
 And now 'tis dark, and going I shall fall :—
 In night, quoth she, desire sees best of all.
 But if thou fall, O then imagine this,
 The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
 And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
 Rich preys make true men thieves ; so do thy lips
 Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
 Lest she should steal a kiss, and die forsworn.
 Now, of this dark night I perceive the reason :
 Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
 Till forging Nature be condemn'd of treason,
 For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine,
 Wherein she fram'd thee, in high heaven's despite,
 To shame the sun by day, and her by night.
 And therefore hath she brib'd the destinies,
 To cross the curious workmanship of nature ;
 To mingle beauty with infirmities,
 And pure perfection with impure defeature ;
 Making it subject to the tyranny
 Of mad in chances, and much misery ;
 As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
 Life-poisoning pestilence, and frenzies wood,
 The narrow-eating sickness, whose attain'd
 Disorder breeds by heating of the blood :
 Surfeits, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
 Swear nature's death for framing thee so fair.
 And not the least of all these maladies,
 But in one minute's fight brings beauty under :
 Both favour, savour, hue, and qualities,
 Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
 Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd, and done,
 As mountain-snow melts with the mid-day sun.
 Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
 Love-lacking vestals, and self-loving nuns,
 That on the earth would breed a scarcity,
 And barren dearth of daughters and of sons,
 Be prodigal : the lamp that burns by night,
 Dries up his oil, to lend the world his light.
 What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
 Seeming to bury that posterity,
 Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
 If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity ?
 If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
 Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.
 So in thyself thyself art made away ;
 A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
 Or theirs, whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
 Or butcher sire, that reaves his son of life.
 Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
 But gold that's put to use, more gold begets.
 Nay then, quoth Adon, you will fall again
 Into your idle over-handled theme ;
 The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
 And all in vain you strive against the stream ;
 For by this black-fac'd night, desire's foul nurse,
 Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse.
 If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
 And every tongue more moving than your own,

Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
 Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown ;
 For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
 And will not let a false sound enter there ;
 Lest the deceiving harmony should run
 Into the quiet closure of my breast ;
 And then my little heart were quite undone,
 In his bed chamber to be barr'd of rest.
 No, lady, no ; my heart longs not to groan,
 But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.
 What have you urg'd, that I cannot reprove ?
 The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger ;
 I hate not love, but your device in love,
 That lends embracements unto every stranger.
 You do it for increase, O, strange excuse !
 When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse.
 Call it not love, for Love to heaven is fled,
 Since sweating Lust on earth usurp'd his name ;
 Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
 Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame ;
 Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves,
 As caterpillars do the tender leaves.
 Love comforteth, like sunshine after rain ;
 But lust's effect is tempest after sun :
 Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
 Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done.
 Love surfeits not ; lust like a glutton dies :
 Love is all truth ; lust full of forged lies.
 More I could tell, but more I dare not say ;
 The text is old, the orator too green.
 Therefore in sadness, now I will away ;
 My face is full of shame, my heart of teen :
 Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
 Do burn themselves for having so offended.
 With this he breaketh from the sweet embrace
 Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
 And homeward through the dark lawn runs apace ;
 Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
 Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
 So glides he in the night from Venns' eye ;
 Which after him she darts, as one on shore
 Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
 Till the wild waves will have him seen no more,
 Whose ridges with the morning clouds contend :
 So did the merciless and pitchy night
 Fold in the object that did feed her sight.
 Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
 Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
 Or 'stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
 Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood ;
 Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
 Having lost the fair discovery of her way.
 And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
 That all the neighbour-caves, as seeming troubled,
 Make verbal repetition of her moans ;
 Passion on passion deeply is redoubled :
 Ah me ! she cries, and twenty times, wo, wo !
 And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.
 She, marking them, begins a wailing note,
 And sings extemp'rally a woful ditty ; [dote ;
 How love makes young men thrall, and old men
 How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty :
 Her heavy anthem still concludes in wo,
 And still the choir of echoes answer so.
 Her song was tedious, and outwore the night,
 For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short :
 If pleas'd themselves, others, they think, delight
 In such like circumstance, with such like sport :
 Their copious stories, oftentimes begun,
 End without audience, and are never done.
 For who hath she to spend the night withal,
 But idle sounds resembling parasites ;
 Like shrill-tongu'd tapsters answering every call,
 Soothing the humour of fantastic wits ?
 She says, 'tis so : they answer all, 'tis so ;
 And would say after her, if she said no.
 Lo ! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
 From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,

And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast,
The Sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold,
That cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
O, thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son, that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other.

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'er-worn:
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds, and for his horn:
Anon she hears them chaunt it lustily,
And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twin'd about her thigh to make her stay;
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ake,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

By this she hears the hounds are at a bay,
Whereat she starts like one that spies an adder
Wreath'd up in fatal folds, just in his way,
The fear whereof doth make him shake and shudder;
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appals her senses, and her spright confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain court'sy, who shall cope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart;
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly, and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstasy,
Till, cheering up her senses sore dismay'd,
She tells them, 'tis a causeless fantasy,
And childish error, that they are afraid;
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more;—
And with that word she spy'd the hunted boar;

Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires to rate the boar for murder.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she uttreads again;
Her more than haste is mated with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain;
Full of respect, yet nought at all respecting;
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.

Here kennel'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary caitiff for his master;
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster;
And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks; and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceas'd his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin vollies out his voice;
Another and another answer him;
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amaz'd
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gaz'd,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad sighs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on death.

Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love, (thus chides she death,)

Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou
To stifle beauty and to steal his breath, [mean,
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

If he be dead,—O, no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou should'st strike at it;—
O, yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age; but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart

Hadst thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And hearing him, thy power had lost his power,
The destinies will curse thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not death's ehon dart, to strike him dead.

Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weep-
What may a heavy groan advantage thee? [ing?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She veil'd her eye-lids, who, like sluices, stopp'd
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropp'd;
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye; [row;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sor-
Sorrow, that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions throng her constant wo,
As striving who should best become her grief,
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
But none is best; then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this far off she hears some huntsman holla;
A nurse's song ne'er pleas'd her babe so well!
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her, it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorning it should pass,
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken, when she seemeth drown'd.

O, hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and wo are both of them extremes;
Despair and hope make thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unweaves the web that she hath wrought;
Adonis lives, and death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all to nought;
Now she adds honours to his hateful name;
She clepes him king of graves and grave for kings
Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

No, no, quoth she, sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me, I felt a kind of fear.
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then, gentle shadow, (truth I must confess,)
I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

'Tis not my fault: the boar provok'd my tongue;
Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
I did but act, he's author of thy slander:
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could rule them both, without ten women's wit.

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;

And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With death she humbly doth insinuate :
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and stories,
His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

O, Jove, quoth she, how much a fool was I,
To be of such a weak and silly mind,
To wail his death, who lives, and must not die,
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind !
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear,
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves ;
Trifles, unwatched with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking grieves.
Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps, that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure, away she flies ;
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light ;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight ;
Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cap with pain,
And there, all smother'd up in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again ;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep dark cabins of her head :

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain ;
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again ;
Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes ;
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound :
This mutiny each part doth so surprise,
That from their dark beds, once more leap her eyes ;

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light,
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank : whose wound lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd :
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth ;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head ;
Dumbly she passions, frantically she doteth ;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead :
Her voice is stopp'd, her joints forget to bow ;
Her eyes are mad, that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three ;
And then she reprehends her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be :
His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled ;
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet, quoth she, behold two Adons dead !
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead :
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire !
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost !
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing ?
Whose tongue is music now ! what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or any thing ensuing ?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim,
But true-sweet beauty liv'd and died with him.

Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear !
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you :
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear ;
The sun doth scorn you, and the wind doth hiss you :
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair :

And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep,

The wind would blow it off, and, being gone,
Play with his locks ; then would Adonis weep :
And straight in pity of his tender years, ^{tears.}
They both would strive who first should dry his

To see his face, the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him :
To recreate himself when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame, and gently hear him ;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills ;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe-red cherries,
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore ;
Witness the entertainment that he gave :
If he did see his face, why then I know,
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'Tis true, 'tis true ; thus was Adonis slain :
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there ;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheath'd, unaware, the tusk in his soft groin.

Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first ;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his ; the more am I accurst.
With this she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale ;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold ;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woful words she told :
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo ! two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies.

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect ;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd,
And every beauty robb'd of his effect :
Wonder of time, quoth she, this is my spite,
That, you being dead, the day should yet be light.

Since thou art dead, lo ! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend :
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end ;
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low ;
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud ;
Bud and be blasted in a breathing-while ;
The bottom poison, and the top o'er-straw'd
With sweets, that shall the truest sight beguile :
The strongest body shall it make most weak ;
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

It shall be sparing and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures ;
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures :
It shall be raging-mad, and silly-mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

It shall suspect, where is no cause of fear ;
It shall not fear, where it should most mistrust ;
It shall be merciful, and too severe,
And most deceiving, when it seems most just ;
Perverse it shall be, where it shews most toward ;
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

It shall be cause of war, and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire ;
Subject and servile to all discontents,
As dry combustible matter is to fire ;

('To tread the measures.'—The measures was a very stately dance, and, therefore, was peculiarly suited to elders, if they engaged at all in such kind of amusement.—Malone.

Sith in his prime death doth my love destroy,
They that love best, their loves shall not enjoy.

By this the boy that by her side lay kill'd,
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood, that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white;
Resembling well his pale cheeks, and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She bows her head the new-sprung flower to smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath.
And says within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is reft from her by death.

She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears
Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.
Poor flower, quoth she, this was thy father's guise,
(Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire,)

For every little grief to wet his eyes :
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 'tis thine ; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast, as in his blood.

Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast ;
Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right :
Lo ! in this hollow cradle take thy rest,
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night :
There shall not be one minute in an hour,
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves ; by whose swift aid,
Their mistress mounted through the empty skies
In her light chariot quickly is convey'd ;
Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen
Meets to immure herself, and not be seen.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

The Epistle.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,

Earl of Southampton and Baron of Titchfield.

THE love I dedicate to your lordship is without end ; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours ; what I have to do is yours ; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater ; mean time, as it is, it is bound to your lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with happiness.

Your lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

The Argument.

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS, (for his extensive pride surnamed Superbusces,) after he had caused his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom ; went, accompanied with his sons, and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege, the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one commended the virtues of his own wife ; among whom, Collatinus extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome ; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatinus finds his wife, (though it were late in the night,) spinning amongst her maids ; the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disorders. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatinus the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time, Sextus Tarquinius, being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp ; from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was (according to his state) royally entertained and lodged by Lucrece at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealth into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucrece, in this lamentable plight, hastily despatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius ; and finding Lucrece attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent, they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins ; and bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the deed, and manner of the vile deed ; with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king : wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation, the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

From the besieg'd Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears the lightless fire,
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire,
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of chaste unhappily set
This bateless edge on his keen appetite ;
When Collatine unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unmatched red and white
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight ;
Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state :
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous mate ;
Reckoning his fortune at such high-proud rate,
That kings might be espoused to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O, happiness enjoy'd but of a few !
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun !
An expir'd date, cancell'd ere well begun :
Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator ;
What needeth then apology be made,
To set forth that which is so singular ?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From thirsty ears, because it is his own ?

Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king ;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be :
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting [vaunt
His high pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should
That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those :
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
O, rash-false heat, wrapt in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old !

When at Collatium this false lord arriv'd,
Well was he welcom'd by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue striv'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame :
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for shame ;
When beauty boasted blushes, in despite
Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.

But beauty, in that white intitled,
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field ;
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield ;
Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,—
When shame assail'd, the red should fence the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white.
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right :
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight ;
The sovereignty of either being so great
That oft they interchange each other's seat.

This silent war of lilies and of roses,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses ;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquished doth yield
To those two armies, that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue,
(The niggard prodigal that prais'd her so,)
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show :
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe,
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper ;
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil ;
Birds never lim'd no secret bushes fear :
So guiltless sho securely gives good cheer
And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd :

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty ;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy ;
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
That cloy'd with much, he pineth still for more.

But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parling looks,
Nor read the subtle-shining secresies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books ;
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no hooks ;
Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy ;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory ;
Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
And wordless so, greets heaven for his success

Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
He makes excuses for his being there ;
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather,
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear ;
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vaulty prison stows the day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending weariness with heavy spright ;
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night ;
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight ;
And every one to rest himself betakes, [wakes.
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining ;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving, [ing :
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstain—
Despair to gain, doth traffic oft for gaining ;
And when great treasure is the meed propos'd,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death suppos'd.

Those that much covet, are with gain so fond,
That what they have not, that which they possess,
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less ;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age,
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage ;
As life for honour, in fell battle's rage ;
Honour for wealth ; and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and altogether lost.

So that in vent'ring ill, we leave to be
The things we are for that which we expect ;
And this ambitious soul infirmity,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have : so then we do neglect
The thing we have ; and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing, by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust ;
And, for himself, himself he must forsake
Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust ?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
Toslanderous tongues, and wretched hateful days ?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes ;
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries :
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs ; pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake, to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm ;
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread ;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm
But honest Fear, bewich'd with lust's foul charm
Doth too, too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude Desire.

His falchion on a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly,
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye ;
And to the flame thus speaks advisedly :
As from this cold flint I enforc'd this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise :
Then looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armour of still-slaughter'd lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust.

Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine !
And die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine !
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine :
Let fair humanity abhor the deed [weed.
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white

O shame to knighthood and to shining arms !
O foul dishonour to my household's grave !
O impious act, including all foul harms !
A martial man to be soft fancy's slave !
True valour still a true respect should have ;
Then my digression is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat ;
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,¹
To cipher me, how fondly I did dote ;
That my posterity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not been.

What win I, if I gain the thing I seek ?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth, to wait a week ?
Or sells eternity, to get a toy ?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy ?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down ?

If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent ?
This siege that hath engirt his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame ?

O, what excuse can my invention make,
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed ?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints shake ?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart bleed ?
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed ;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife ;
As in revenge or quittal of such strife :
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

Shameful it is ;—ay, if the fact be known :
Hateful it is ;—there is no hate in loving :
I'll beg her love ;—but she is not her own :
The worst is but denial, and reproving :
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing :
Who fears a sentence, or an old man's saw,
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation,
'Tween frozen conscience and hot burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still ;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, she took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes ;
Fearing some hard news from the warlike band,
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.
O, how her fear did make her colour rise !
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd
Fore'd it to tremble with her loyal fear !
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear ;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

Why hunt I then for colour or excuses ?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth,
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses ;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth :
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth ;
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights, and will not be dismay'd.

Then childish fear, avaunt ! debating, die !
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age !
My heart shall never countermand mine eye :
Sad pause and deep regard beseech the sage ;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage :
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize ;
Then who fears sinking, where such treasure lies ?

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost chok'd by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hope, and full of fond mistrust ;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine :
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits ;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline ;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted, takes the worse part ;

And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by their leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours ;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforce'd, retires his ward ;
But as they open, they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard :
The threshold grates the door to have him heard ;
Night-wandering weasels shriek, to see him there ;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case ;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch :

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucrecia's glove, wherein her needle sticks ;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies ;
And gripping it, the needl his finger pricks :
As who should say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inur'd ; return again in haste ;
Thou seest our mistress' ornaments are chaste.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him ;
He in the worst sense construes their denial :
The doors, the wind, the glove, that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial ;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial ;
Who with a ling'ring stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

¹ 'Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive.'—
In the books of heraldry, a particular mark of disgrace is mentioned, by which the escutcheons of those persons were anciently distinguished, who 'discourteously used a widow, maid, or wife, against her will.'—Malone

So, so, quoth he, these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snaped birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing; [sands,
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves, and
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands.

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heavens should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited the eternal power
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts:—quoth he, I must deflower;
The powers to whom I pray, abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?

Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution:
Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried,
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide:
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch:
Thus treason works ere traitors be espy'd.
Who sees the lurking serpent, steps aside;
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
And gazeth on her yet-unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eye-balls in his head:
By their high treason is his heart misled;
Which gives the watch-word to his hand full soon,
To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, her eyes begun
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is, that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died,
Then had they seen the period of their ill!
Then Collatine again, hy Lucrece' side,
In his clear bed might have reposed still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side, to want his bliss;
Between whose hills her head intombed is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admird of lewd unhallow'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet: whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light;
And, canopied in darkness, sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her breath;
O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality:
Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life lived in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with bl...
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord, no bearing yoke they knew
And him by oath they truly honoured.
These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see, but mightily he noted?
What did he note, but strongly he desir'd?
What he beheld, on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tir'd.
With more than admiration he admir'd
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust, by gazing qualified;
Slack'd, not suppress'd; for, standing by her side,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fighting,
Obdurate vassals, fell exploits effecting,
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children's tears, nor mothers' groans respecting,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarm striking,
Gives the hot charge, and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round turrets destitute and pale

They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She, much amaz'd, breaks ope her lock'd-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and controll'd.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a shaking;
What terror 'tis! but she, in worsen taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies;
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shifting antics, ugly in her eyes;
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries;
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,
(Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall!)
May feel her heart (poor citizen!) distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
This moves in him more rage, and lesser pity,
To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe;
Who, o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehemence prayers urgeth still,
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: The colour in thy face,
(That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace.)
Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale:
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd fort; the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide :
Thy beauty hath ensnar'd thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide ;
My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

I see what crosses my attempt will bring ;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends ;
I think the honey guarded with a sting ;
All this, beforehand, counsel comprehends ;
But will is deaf, and hears no heedful friends ;
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

I have debated, even in my soul, [breed ;
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall
But nothing can affection's course control,
Or stop the headlong furl of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed ;
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity ;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade,
Whose crooked beak threatens, if he mount he dies :
So under his insulting falchion lies Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells,
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

Lucrece, quoth he, this night I must enjoy thee :
If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee ;
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay ;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye ;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy :
And thou, the author of thy obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend :
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted ;
A little harm, done to a great good end,
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound ; being so applied,
His venom in effect is purified.

Then for thy husband, and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit : bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot ;
Worse than a slavish wipe, or birth-hour's blot :
For marks descried in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye,
He rouseth up himself, and makes a pause ;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the grype's sharp claws,
Pleads in a wilderness, where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite.

Look, when a black-fac'd cloud the world doth threat,

In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle dust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their biding,
Hindering their present fall by this dividing :
So his unhallow'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse panteth :
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth :
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining :
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with raining.

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face ;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place ;
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin, ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath,
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended,
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee ;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended ;
End thy ill aim, before thy shoot be ended ;
He is no wood-man that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me ;
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me ;
Myself a weakling, do not then ensnare me :
Thou look'st not like wilt deceive ; do not deceive me :
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave
thee.

If ever man were mov'd with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans,

All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threat'ning heart,
To soften it with their continual motion ;
For stones dissolv'd to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears and be compassionate !
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee :
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame ?
To all the host of heaven I complain me, [name.
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely
Thou art not what thou seem'st ; and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king ;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring ?
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not, when once thou art a king ?
O, be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wip'd away ;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

This deed will make thee only lov'd for fear,
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love :
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove ;
If but for fear of this, thy will remove ;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book.
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

And wilt thou be the school where Lust shalt learn ?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame ?
Wilt thou be glass, wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name ?
Thou black'st reproach against long-lived laud,
And mak'st fair reputation but a bawd.

Hast thou command ? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will :
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul Sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way ?

Think but how vile a spectacle it were,
To view thy present trespass in woe.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear ;
Their own transgressions partially they smother :
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother
O, how are they wrapp'd in with infamies,
That from their own misdeeds askance their eyes

To thee, to thee, my heav'd-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash relier ;
I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal ;
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire :
His true respect will 'prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy dotting eyne,
That thou shalt see thy state, and pity mine.

Have done, quoth he ; my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret :
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls' haste,
Add to his flow, but alter not his taste.

Thou art, quoth she, a sea, a sovereign king !
And lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is hears'd,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispers'd.

So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave ;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified ;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave :
Thou loathed in their shame, they in thy pride :
The lesser thing should not the greater hide ;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state—
No more, quoth he, by heaven, I will not hear thee ;
Yield to my love ; if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee ;
That done, despitefully I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies :
Shame folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannise.
The wolf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb cries ;
Till with her own white fleece her voice controll'd
Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold :

For with the nightly linen that she wears,
He pens her piteous clamours in her head ;
Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed !
The spots whereof could weeping purify,
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again ;
This forced league doth force a further strife ;
This momentary joy breeds months of pain ;
This hot desire converts to cold disdain :
Pure chastity is rifled of her store,
And lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
The prey wherein by nature they delight ;
So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night :
His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will, that liv'd by foul devouring.

O, deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination !
Drunken Desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat, or rein his rash desire,
Till, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble Desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar wails his case :
The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with grace,
For there it revels ; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chas'd ;
For now against himself he sounds this doom,—
That through the length of times he stands disgrac'd
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defac'd ;
To whose weak ruins muster troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death, and pain perpetual :
Which in her prescience she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.

Even in this thought, through the dark night he
A captive victor, that hath lost in gain ; [stealeth,
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain ;
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burthen of a guilty mind.

He, like a thievish dog, creeps sadly thence,
She like a weary'd lamb lies panting there ;
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence,
She desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear ;
He faintly sies, sweating with guilty fear ;
She stays, exclaiming on the direful night ;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loath'd delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertite,
She there remains a hopeless cast-away :
He in his speed looks for the morning light,
She prays she never may behold the day :
For day, quoth she, night's escapes doth open lay ;
And my true eyes have never practis'd how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold ;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold ;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water that doth eat in steel,
Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel.

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer chest, to close so pure a mind.
Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
Against the unseen secrecy of night.

O, comfort-killing night, image of hell !
Dim register and notary of shame !
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell !
Vast sin-concealing chaos ! nurse of blame !
Blind muffled bawd ! dark harbour for defame !
Grim cave of death, whispering conspirator
With close-tongu'd treason and the ravisher !

O, hateful, vaporous, and foggy night,
Since thou art guilty of my curcleless crime,
Muster thy mists to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time !
Or, if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

With rotten damps ravish the morning air ;
Let their exhal'd unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prick ;
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
That in their smoky ranks his smother'd light
May set at noon, and make perpetual night.

Were Tarquin night, (as he is but night's child,
The silver-shining queen he would detain ;
Her twinkling handmaids, too, by him defil'd,
Through night's black bosom should not peep again :
So should I have copartners in my pain :
And fellowship in wo doth wo assuage,
As palmers' chat make short their pilgrimage.

Where now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms, and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows, and hide their infamy;
But I alone, alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine;
Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.

O night, thou furnace of foul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made,
May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade!

Make me not object to the tell-tale day!
The light will show, character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
Yea, the illiterate that know not how
To 'cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loathsome trespass in my looks.

The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name;
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame:
Feast-finding minstrels,¹ tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I, Collatine.

Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted;
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted,
That is as clear from this attainment of mine,
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

O, unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O, unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd on Collatinus' face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
Alas, how many bear such shameful blows, [knows!
Which not themselves, but he that gives them,

If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

Yet am I guiltless of thy honour's wreck;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue:—O, unlook'd for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!

Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud?
Or hateful cuckoos hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair founts with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

The aged man that coffers up his gold,
Is plagu'd with cramps, and gouts, and painful fits;
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless burns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain,
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

So then he hath it, when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young;
Who in their pride do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long,
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sours,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers;
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing;
What virtue breeds, iniquity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill annexed opportunity,
Or kills his life, or else his quality.

O, Opportunity! thy guilt is great:
'Tis thou that execut'st the traitor's treason;
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou 'point'st the season;
'Tis thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath:
Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is thaw'd;
Thou smother'st honesty, thou murder'st troth;
Thou foul abettor! thou notorious bawd!
Thou plantest scandal, and displacest laud:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!

Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public fast;
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name;
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste:
Thy violent vanities can never last.
How comes it, then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to end?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chain'd?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain'd?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee;
But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds;
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds:
Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

When Truth and Virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid;
They buy thy help: but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes; and thou art well appay'd,
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.
My Collatine would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

Guilt thou art of murder and of theft;
Guilty of perjury and subornation;
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift;
Guilty of incest, that abomination:
An accessory by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

Misshappen Time, copesmate of ugly night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care;
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight, [snare;
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's
Thou nurdest all, and murderest all that are.
O, hear me then, injurious, shifting Time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose?
Cancel'd my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is, to find the nate of foes;
To eat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn, and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wronger till he render right;
To ruinat proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust thy glittering golden towers:

1 'Feast-finding minstrels.' Our ancient minstrels were the constant attendants on feasts.—Stevens.

Thus cavils she with every thing she sees :
True grief is fond and testy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with nought agrees.
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild ;
Continuance tames the one ; the other wild,
Like an unpractis'd swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare ;
No object but her passions strength renews ;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues :
Sometime her grief is dumb, and hath no words ;
Sometime 'tis mad, and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy,
Make her moans mad with their sweet melody :
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy ;
Sad souls are slain in merry company ;
Grief best is pleas'd with grief's society :
True sorrow then is feelingly suffic'd,
When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd.

'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore ;
He ten times pines, that pines beholding food ;
To see the salve doth make the wound ake more ;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good :
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'erflows ;
Grief dallied with nor law nor limit knows.

You mocking birds, quoth she, your tunes entomb
Within your hollow-swelling feather'd breasts !
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb !
(My restless discord knows no stops nor rests ;
A woful hostess brooks not merry guests :)
Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears,
Distress likes dumps when time is kept with tears.

Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my dishevel'd hair.
As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the diapason bear :
For burthen-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st, better skill.

And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife, to affright my eye :
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
These means, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.

And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That knows not parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out ; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds ;
Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds.

As the poor frighted deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly ;
Or one incompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily ;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twin were better,
When life is sham'd, and death reproaches debtor.

To kill myself, quoth she, alack ! what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution ?
They that lose half, with greater patience bear it,
Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion,
Who having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
Will slay the other, and be nurse to none.

My body or my soul, which was the dearer ?
When the one pure, the other made divine,
Whose love of either to myself was nearer ?
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine.
Ah me ! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
His leaves will wither, and his sap decay ;
So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy ;
Her sacred table spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grossly engirt with daring infamy :
Then let it not be call'd impiety,
If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole,
Through which I may convey this troubled soul
Yet die I will not, till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death ;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him tainted, shall for him be spent,
And as his due, writ in my testament.

My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonoured.
'Tis honour to deprive dishonour'd life ;
The one will live, the other being dead :
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred ;
For in my death I murder shameful scorn :
My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee ;
My resolution, love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou reveng'd may'st be.
How Tarquin must be us'd, read it in me :
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And, for my sake, serve thou false Tarquin so.

This brief abridgment of my will I make :
My soul and body to the skies and ground ;
My resolution, husband, do thou take ;
Mine honour be the knife's, that makes my wound ;
My shame be his that did my fame confound ;
And all my fame that lives, disbursed be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this Will ;¹
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it !
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill ;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, so be it.
Yield to my hand ; my hand shall conquer thee ;
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wip'd the brinish pearl from her bright eyes,
With untun'd tongue she hoarsely call'd her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies ;
For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies.
Poor Lucrece's cheeks unto her maid seem as
As winter meads, when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-morrow ;
With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty ;
And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow,
(For why ? her face wore sorrow's livery :)
But durst not ask of her audaciously
Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with wo.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye ;
Even so the maid with swelling drops 'gan wet
Her circled eyne, enforc'd by sympathy
Of those fair suns, set in her mistress's sky,
Who in a salt-wav'd ocean quench their light,
Which makes the maid weep like the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling :
One justly weeps ; the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling :
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing ;
Grieving themselves to guess at others' smart ;
And then they drown their eyes, or break their hearts :

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they formed as marble will ;

¹ 'Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will.'—The overseer of a will was designed as a check upon the executors. Our author appoints John Hall and his wife for his executors, and Thomas Russel and Francis Collins as his overseers.—Steevens.

The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill :
Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than wax shall be accounted evil,
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep ;
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep :
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep :
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd !
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be hid
Poor women's faults, that they are so fulfill'd
With men's abuses : those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night, with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong ;
Such danger to resistance did belong,
That dying fear through all her body spread ;
And who cannot abuse a body dead ?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining ;
My girl, quoth she, on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining, [raining ?
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood :
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

But tell me, girl, when went—(and there she stay'd Till after a deep groan) Tarquin from hence ?
Madam, ere I was up, reply'd the maid,
The more to blame my sluggard negligence :
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense ;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

But lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.
O peace ! quoth Lucrece ; if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less ;
For more it is than I can well express :
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell,
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen,—
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say ?—One of my husband's men
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear ;
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it :
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ.

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill :
Conceit and grief an eager combat fight ;
What wit sets down, is blotted straight with will ;
This is too curious good, this blunt and ill :
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins : "Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
Health to thy person ! next vouchsafe t' afford,
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see),
Some present speed, to come and visit me :
So I commend me from our house in grief ;
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."

Here folds she up the tenor of her wo,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality :
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her ;

When sighs and groans and tears may grace the
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her [fashion
From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told ;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of wo doth bear,
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear :
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords,
And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of words.
Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
*At Ardea to my lord, with more than haste :*¹
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-fac'd groom to hie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast.
Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems :
Extremity still urgeth such extremes.

The homely villen courtesies to her low ;
And blushing on her, with a steadfast eye,
Receives the scroll, without or yea or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie,
Imagine every eye beholds their blame ;
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame.

When, silly groom ! God wot, 'twas defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely :
Even so, this pattern of the worn-out age
Pawn'd honest looks, but lay'd no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blaz'd ;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wistly on him gaz'd ;
Her earnest eye did make him more amaz'd :
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spy'd in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan :
So wo hath wearied wo, moan tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Pausing for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy ;
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening cloud-kissing Ilium with annoy ;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heaven (it seem'd) to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of nature, art gave lifeless life :
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife :
The red blood reek'd, to show the painter's strife ;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashy lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrim'd with sweat, and smeared all with dust ;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust :
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.
In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces ;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity ;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces ;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble

¹ At Ardea, to my lord, with more than haste.—
About a century and a half ago, all our letters that required speed were superscribed, With post post haste.
—Malone.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O, what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either 'cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent,
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 'twere encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight:
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which pur'd up to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly list'n'ing, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice;
Some high, some low; the painter was so nice,
The scalps of many almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one, being throng'd, bears back, all boll'n and Another, smother'd, seems to pelt and swear; [red;
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Grip'd in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind:
A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong-besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy [field,
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
That, through their light joy, seemed to appear (Like bright things stain'd) a kind of heavy fear.

And, from the strond of Dardan where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and then Retire again, till meeting greater ranks,
They join, and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is staid.
Many she sees, where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and dolour dwell'd,
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld,
Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatomiz'd
Time's ruin, beauty's wreck, and grim care's reign;
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguis'd;
Of what she was, no semblance did remain:
Her blue blood chang'd to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had fed,
Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the beldame's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,
And bitter words, to ban her cruel foes:
The painter was no god to lend her those;
And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
To give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

Poor instrument, quoth she, without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue:
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong,
And with my tears quench Troy, that burns so long;
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear;
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here:
And here, in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter, die.

Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many mo?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty wo:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swoonds;
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds:
Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire.

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell;
So Lucrece, set a-work, sad tales doth tell
To pencil'd pensiveness and colour'd sorrow; [row.
She lends them words, and she their looks doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the painting, round,
And whom she finds forlorn, she doth lament:
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent;
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show,
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes wailing still,
A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome wo;
Cheeks, neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensconced his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust,
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-fac'd storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image drew
For perjur'd Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew;
Whose words, like wild-fire, burnt the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilium, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places, [faces.
When their glass fell, wherein they view'd their

This picture she advis'dly perus'd,
And chid the painter for his wond'rous skill;
Saying, some shape in Sinon's was abus'd,
So fair a form lodg'd not a mind so ill;
And still on him she gaz'd; and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spy'd,
That she concludes the picture was bely'd.

It cannot be, quoth she, that so much guile—
(She would have said) can lurk in such a look;
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue, can lurk from cannot took;
It cannot be she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus: 'It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind.'

For even as subtle Sinon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
(As if with grief or travail he had fainted,)
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguil'd
With outward honesty, but yet defil'd
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those borrow'd tears that Sinon sheds.
Priam, why art thou old, and yet not wise ?
For every tear he falls, a Trojan bleeds ;
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds :
Those round clear pearls of his, that move thy pity,
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

Such devils steal effects from lightless hell ;
For Sinon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold, hot-burning fire doth dwell ;
These contraries such unity do hold,
Only to flatter fools, and make them bold :
So Priam's trust false Sinon's tears doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water.

Here, all enrag'd, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Sinon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest,
Whose deed hath made herself, herself detest :
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er ;
Fool ! fool ! quoth she, his wounds will not be sore.

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she thinks too long with her remaining :
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining.
Though wo be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps ;
And they that watch, see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath overslipp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent ;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others detriment ;
Losing her woes in shows of discontent.
It easeth some, though none it ever cur'd,
To think their dolour others have endur'd.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company ;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black :
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky ;
These water galls in her dim element
Foretel new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazed in her sad face he stares :
Her eyes, though sold in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares ;
But stood, like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins : What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befall'n, that thou dost trembling stand ?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent ?
Why art thou thus attir'd in discontent ?
Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of wo :
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is ta'en prisoner by the foe ;
While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending :
Few words, quoth she, shall fit the trespass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending ;
In me more woes than words are now depending ;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

Then be this all the task it hath to say :
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head ;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas ! thy Lucrece is not free.

For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining falchion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cry'd, Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love ; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

For some hard-favour'd groom of thine, quoth he Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee,
And swear I found you where you did fulfil
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill
The lechers in their deed : this act will be
My fame, and thy perpetual infamy.

With this I did begin to start and cry,
And then against my heart he set his sword ;
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word :
So should my shame still rest upon record ;
And never be forgot in mighty Rome
The adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear :
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak ;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there :
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes,
And when the judge is rob'd, the prisoner dies.

O, teach me how to make mine own excuse !
Or, at the least, this refuge let me find ;
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind ;
That was not forc'd ; that never was inclin'd
To accessory yieldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Lo, here, the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With head declin'd, and voice damnd up with wo,
With sad-set eyes, and wretched arras across,
From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow
The grief away, that stops his answer so :
But wretched as he is, he strives in vain ;
What he breathes out, his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Out-runs the eye that doth behold his haste,
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forc'd him on so fast ;
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past :
Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw,
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless wo of his, poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh :
Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
Another power, no flood by raining slaketh.
My wo too sensible thy passion maketh
More feeling-painful : let it then suffice
To drown one wo, one pair of weeping eyes.

And for my sake, when I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece,—now attend me ;
Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own ; suppose thou dost defend me
From what is past ; the help that thou shalt lend me
Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die :
For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

But ere I name him, you fair lords, quoth she,
(Speaking to those, that came with Collatine,
Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine :
For 'tis a meritorious fair design,
To chase injustice with revengeful arms : [harmes
Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies'

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
But she, that yet her sad task hath not said,
The protestation stops. O, speak, quoth she,
How may this forced stain be wip'd from me ?

What is the quality of mine offence,
Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
May my pure mind with the foul act dispense,
My low-declined honour to advance?
May any terms acquit me from this chance?
The poison'd fountain clears itself again;
And why not I from this compell'd stain?

With this they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind untainted clears;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that map which deep impression bears
Of hard misfortune, carv'd in it with tears.
No, no, quoth she, no dame, hereafter living,
By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving.

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name: He, he, she says,
But more than he her poor tongue could not speak;
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
She utters this: He, he, fair lords, 'tis he,
That guides this hand to give this wound to me.

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheath'd:
That blow did bail it from the deep unrest
Of that polluted prison where it breath'd:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeath'd
Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's lasting date from cancel'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew;
Till Lucrece' father that beholds her bleed,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
The murderous knife, and as it left the place,
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who like a late-sack'd island vastly stood,
Rare and unpeopled, in this fearful flood.
Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood, a wat'ry rigol goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood untainted still doth red abide,
Blushing at that which is so putrify'd.

Daughter, dear daughter, old Lucretius cries,
That life was mine, which thou hast here depriv'd.
If in the child the father's image lies,
Where shall I live, now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wast not to this end from me deriv'd.
If children pre-decease progenitors,
We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new-born;
But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a bare-bon'd death by time out-worn;
O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn!
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
That I no more can see what once I was.

O time, cease thou thy course, and last no longer,
If they surcease to be, that should survive,
Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger,
And leave the faltering feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again, and see
Thy father die, and not thy father thee!

By this starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfeits to die with her a space;
Till manly shame bids him possess his breath,
And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath serv'd a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
Who mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long
Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng
Weak words, so thick come, in his poor heart's aid,
That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime Tarquin was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
Then son and father weep with equal strife,
Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says, she's mine: O, mine she is,
Replies the husband: Do not take away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatine.

O, quoth Lucretius, I did give that life,
Which she too early and too late hath spill'd.
Wo, wo, quoth Collatine, she was my wife,
I ow'd her, and 'tis mine that she hath kill'd,
My daughter and my wife with clamours fill'd
The dispers'd air, who holding Lucrece' life,
Answer'd their cries, my daughter and my wife.

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece' side,
Seeing such emulation in their wo,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece' wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly-jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things.

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
And arm'd his long-hid wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
Thou wronged lord of Rome, quoth he, arise;
Let my unsounded self, suppos'd a fool,
Now set thy long-experienc'd wit to school.

Why, Collatine, is wo the cure for wo? [deeds?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow,
For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds;
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations:
But kneel with me, and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgrac'd,
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chas'd.

Now by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain'd,
By heaven's fair sun, that breeds the fat earth's store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintain'd,
And by chaste Lucrece' soul, that late complain'd
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife, to end his vow;
And to his protestation urg'd the rest,
Who wondering at him, did his words allow:
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

ALL HAPPINESS, AND THAT ETERNITY PROMISED BY OUR EVER-LIVING POET, WISHETH THE

WELL-WISHING ADVENTURER IN SETTING FORTH,

T. T.*

I.

From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the ripper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel.
Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel,
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament,
And only herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own buduriest thy content,
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.
Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II.

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gaz'd on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held:
Then, being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days;
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame, and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserv'd thy beauty's use,
If thou could'st answer—"This fair child of mine Shall sum my count, and make my old excuse,"
Proving his beauty by succession thine.
This were to be new made, when thou art old,
And see thy blood warm, when thou feel'st it cold.

III.

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest,
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unless some mother.
For where is she so fair, whose un-ear'd womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond, will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this the golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend;
And being frank, she lends to those are free.
Then,auteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give?
Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?

Thy unus'd beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives thy executor to be.

V.

Those hours, that with gentle work did frame,
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair, which fairly doth excel;
For never-resting time leads summer on
To hideous winter and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost, and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'er-snow'd, and bareness every where:
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was:
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Lose but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be distill'd:
Make sweet some phial, treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury,
Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times refigur'd thee:
Then what could death do, if thou should'st depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest, and make worms thine heir.

VII.

Lo, in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having climbd the steep-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage;
But when from high-mast pitch, with weary car,
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
The eyes, fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract, and look another way:
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on, diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly?
Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou should'st bear.

* i. e. Thomas Thorpe, in whose name the Sonnets were first entered in Stationers' Hall.

Mark. how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each, by mutual ordering;
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee, "thou single wilt prove none."

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye,
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shall hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow, and still weep,
That thou no form of these hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrif in the world doth spend,
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unus'd, the user so destroys it.
No love towards others in that bosom sits,
That on himself such murderous shame commits.

X.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant if thou wilt, thou art belov'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st, is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire;
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O, change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st,
Thou may'st call thine, when thou from youth con-
Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase; [vertest.
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay:
If all were minded so, the times should cease,
And threescore years would make the world away.
Let those whom nature hath not made for store,
Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
Look, whom she best endow'd, she gave thee more;
Which bounteous gift thou should'st in bounty cherish:
She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby
Thou should'st print more, nor let that copy die.

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls, all silver'd o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow;
And nothing 'gainst time's scythe can make defence,
Save breed, to brave him, when he takes thee hence.

XIII.

O, that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours, than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty which you hold in lease,
Find no determination: then you were Yourself again, after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.

3 X

Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honour might uphold,
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day,
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
O! none but unthrif:—Dear my love, you know,
You had a father; let your son say so.

XIV.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy;
But not to tell of good, or evil luck,
Of plagues, of dearths, or season's quality:
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain, and wind;
Or say, with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that I in heaven find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And (constant stars) in them I read such art,
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If from thyself to store thou would'st convert:
Or else of thee this I prognosticate,
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment;
That this huge state presenteth nought but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and check'd even by the self-same sky,
Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful time debateth with decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And, all in war with time, for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engraft you new.

XVI.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours;
And many maiden gardens, yet unset,
With virtuous wish would bear you living flowers,
Much liker than your painted counterfeit:
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair,
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
To give away yourself, keeps yourself still;
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

XVII.

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
Though yet heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say, this poet lies,
Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.
So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scorn'd, like old men of less truth than tongue;
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
And stretched metre of an antique song:
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice;—in it, and in my rhyme.

XVIII.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate.
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd;

But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest ;
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest :
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

XIX.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood ;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-liv'd phenix in her blood ;
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st,
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world, and all her fading sweets ;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime :
O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen ;
Him in thy course untainted do allow,
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old Time : despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

XX.

A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted,
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion ;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion ;
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth ;
A man in hue all hues in his controlling, [zeth.
Which steals men's eyes, and women's souls ama-
And for a woman wert thou first created ;
Till nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
And by addition me of thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing,
But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

XXI.

So is it not with me, as with that muse
Stirr'd by a painted beauty to his verse ;
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse ;
Making a complement of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in this huge rondure hems.
O let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air :
Let them say more that like of hearsay well ;
I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

XXII.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date ;
But when in three time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee,
Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me ;
How can I then be elder than thou art ?
O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
As I not for myself but for thee will ;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
Presume not on thy heart, when mine is slain ;
Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.

As an unperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say [heart ;
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
O'er-charg'd with burthen of mine own love's might.
O, let my books be then the eloquence
And dumb presagers of my speaking breast ;

Who plead for love, and look for recompence,
More than that tongue that more hath more ex-press'd.

O, learn to read what silent love hath writ :
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

XXIV.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath steel'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart ;
My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
And perspective it is best painter's art.
For through the painter must you see his skill,
To find where your true image pictur'd lies ;
Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done ;
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me
Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee ;
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art,
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

XXV.

Let those who are in favour with their stars,
Of public honour and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.
Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread,
But as the marigold at the sun's eye ;
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.
The painful warrior famoused for fight,
After a thousand victories once foil'd ;
Is from the book of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd.
Then happy I, that love and am belov'd,
Where I may not remove, nor be remov'd.

XXVI.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit ;
To thee I send this written embassage,
To witness duty, not to show my wit :
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show it,
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it :
Till whatsoever star that guides my moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect,
And puts apparel on my tatter'd loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect :
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee ; [me.
Till then, not show my head where thou may'st prove

XXVII.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tir'd ;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expir'd :
For then my thoughts (from far where I abide)
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eye-lids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see :
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night bright, and her old face new.
Lo thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for myself, no quiet find.

XXVIII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debarr'd the benefit of rest ?
When day's oppression is not eas'd by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress'd ?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me ;
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven.
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night
When sparkling stars twine not, thou gild'st the even

But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stronger.

XXIX.

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweepe my out-cast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least ;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee,—and then my state
(Like to the lark at break of day arising From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate :)
For thy sweet love remember'd, such wealth brings,
That thou I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste :
Then can I drown an eye, ununs'd to flow.
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since-cancell'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.
Then can I grieve at grievances fore-gone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-beanoan'd moan.
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

XXXI.

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead ;
And there reigns love, and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stol'n from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie !
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give ;
That due of many now is thine alone :
Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thou (all they) hast all the all of me.

XXXII.

If thou survive my well-contented day, [cover ;
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And, though they be out-stripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
O, then vouchsafe me but this loving thought !
*Had my friend's muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage :
But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.*

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchymy ;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace :
Even so my sun one early morn did shine,
With all triumphant splendour on my brow ;
But out, alack ! he was but one hour mine,
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.

Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth ;
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day,
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke ?
'Tis not enough that through the cloud thou break,
To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak,
That heals the wound, and cures not the disgrace :
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief ;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss :
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.
Ah ! but those tears are pearl, which thy love sheds,
And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be griev'd at that which thou hast done :
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud ;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare ;
Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are :
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense,
(Thy adverse party is thy advocate,)
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence ;
Such civil war is in my love and hate,
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief, which sourly robs from me.

XXXVI.

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one :
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewail'd guilt should do thee shame ;
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name :
But do not so ; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth ;
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entied in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store :
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give,
That I in thy abundance am sufficed,
And by a part of all thy glory live.
Look what is best, that best I wish in thee ;
This wish I have ; then ten times happy me.

XXXVIII.

How can my muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse ?
O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal, stand against thy sight ;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light ?
Be thou the tenth muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old nine, which rhymers invocate ;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to out-live long date.
If my slight muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine but thine shall be the praise

XXXIX.

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
 When thou art all the better part of me?
 What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
 And what is't but mine own, when I praise thee?
 Even for this let us divided live,
 And our dear love lose name of single one;
 That by this separation I may give
 That due to thee, which thou deserv'st alone.
 O absence, what a torment would'st thou prove,
 Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
 To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
 (Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive),
 And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
 By praising him here, who doth hence remain.

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
 What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
 No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call;
 All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more.
 Then, if for my love thou my love receivest,
 I cannot blame thee, for my love thou usest;
 But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
 By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
 I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
 Although thou steal thee all my poverty;
 And yet love knows, it is a greater grief
 To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
 Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
 Kill me with apites; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits,
 When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
 Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
 For still temptation follows where thou art.
 Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won,
 Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assail'd;
 And when a woman woos, what woman's son
 Will sourly leave her till she have prevail'd.
 Ah me! but yet thou might'st, my sweet, forbear,
 And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
 Who lead thee in their riot even there
 Where thou art forc'd to break a two-fold truth:
 Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
 Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
 And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
 That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
 A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
 Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:—
 Thou dost love her, because thou knew'st I love her;
 And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
 Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her;
 If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
 And, losing her, my friend bath found that loss;
 Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
 And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
 But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
 Sweet flattery!—then she loves but me alone.

XLIII.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
 For all the day they view things unexpected;
 But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
 And darkly bright, are bright in dark directed,
 Then thou, whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
 How would thy shadow's form form happy show
 To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
 When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so?
 How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made
 By looking on thee in the living day,
 When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
 Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?
 All days are nights to see, till I see thee, [me]
 And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee

XLIV.

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
 Injurious distance should not step my way;
 For then, despite of space, I would be brought
 From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
 No matter, then, although my foot did stand
 Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee,
 For nimble thought can jump both sea and land,
 As soon as think the place where he would be.
 But ah! thought kills me, that I am not thought,
 To leap large lengths of miles, when thou art gone,
 But that so much of earth and water wrought,
 I must attend time's leisure with my moan;
 Receiving nought by elements so slow
 But heavy tears, badges of either's woe:

XLV.

The other two, slight air and purging fire,
 Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
 The first my thought, the other my desire,
 These present-absent with swift motion slide
 For when these quicker elements are gone
 In tender embassy of love to thee,
 My life, being made of four, with two alone
 Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;
 Until life's composition be recur'd
 By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
 Who even but now come back again, assur'd
 Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
 This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
 I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI.

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war,
 How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
 Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
 Mine heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
 My heart doth plead, that thou in him dost lie,
 (A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes),
 But the defendant doth that plea deny,
 And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
 To 'cide this title is impannelled
 A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart;
 And by their verdict is determined
 The clear eye's moiety, and the dear heart's part:
 As thus; mine eye's due is thine outward part,
 And my heart's right thine inward love of heart.

XLVII.

Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
 And each doth good turns now unto the other;
 When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
 Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother,
 With my love's picture then my eye doth feast,
 And to the painted banquet bids my heart:
 Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
 And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
 So, either by thy picture or my love,
 Thyself away, art present still with me;
 For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move.
 And I am still with them, and they with thee;
 Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
 Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.

How careful was I, when I took my way,
 Each trifle under truest bars to thrust;
 That, to my use, it might unused stay
 From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
 But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
 Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
 Thou, best of dearest, and mine only care,
 Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
 Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
 Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
 Within the gentle closure of my breast, [part]
 From whence at pleasure thou may'st come and
 And even thence thou wilt be stolen, I fear,
 For truth proves thiefish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
When as thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advis'd respects ;
Against that time, when thou shalt strangely pass,
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye ;
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity ;
Against that time do I ensconce me here,
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part :
To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws,
Since, why to love, I can allege no cause.

L.

How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek,—my weary travel's end,—
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
Thus far the miles are measur'd from thy friend !
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider lov'd not speed, being made from thee :
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide ; —
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side ;
For that same groan doth put this in my mind,—
My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

LI.

Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer, when from thee I speed :
From where thou art why should I haste me thence ?
Till I return, of posting is no need.
O, what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow ?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind ?
In winged speed no motion shall I know :
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace ;
Therefore desire, of perfect love being made,
Shall neigh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race ;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade ;
Since from thee going he went wilful-slow,
Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure,
Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare,
Since seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you, as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe, which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special-blest,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.

What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend ?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you ;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new :
Speak of the spring, and foison of the year ;
The one doth shadow of your beauty show,
The other as your bounty doth appear ;
And you in every blessed shape we know.
In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.

O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem,
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give !
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye,
As the perfum'd tincture of the roses ;
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses ;
But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fade ;
Die to themselves ; Sweet roses do not so ;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made ;
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse disills your truth.

LV.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall out-live this powerful rhyme ;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone, besmear'd with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity [room
Shall you pace forth ; your praise shall still find
Even in the eyes of all posterity,
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.

Sweet love, renew thy force ; be it not said,
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite ;
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might :
So, love, be thou ; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view ;
Or call it winter, which being full of care, [rare.
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more

LVII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon the hours and times of your desire ?
I have no precious time at all to spend
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour,
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour,
When you have bid your servant once adieu ;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought,
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose ;
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought,
Save, where you are, how happy you make those :
So true a fool is love, that in your will (Though you do any thing) he thinks no ill.

LVIII.

That God forbid, that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure !
O, let me suffer (being at your beck)
The imprison'd absence of your liberty
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check,
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list ; your charter is so strong,
That you yourself may privilege your time :
Do what you will, to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell ;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that, which is,
Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
Which, labouring for invention, bear amiss
The second burthen of a former child?
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,¹
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are mended, or wher better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O! sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

LX.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before;
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crook'd eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And time that gave, doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow:
And yet, to times in hope, my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.

Is it thy will, thy image should keep open
My heavy eye-lids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows, like to thee, do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home, into my deeds to pry;
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenor of thy jealousy?
O no! thy love, though much, is not so great;
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake;
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake:
For thee watch I, whilst thou dost wake elsewhere
From me far off, with others all-too-near.

LXII.

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
And all my soul, and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worths surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read,
Self so self-loving were iniquity.
'Tis thee (myself) that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

LXIII.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With time's injurious hand crush'd and o'er worn;
When hours have drain'd his blood, and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night;
And all those beauties, wherof now he's king,
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life:
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them still green.

¹ 'Show me your image in some antique book.'—
It was an ancient custom to insert real portraits among the ornaments of illuminated manuscripts, with inscriptions under them.—Steevens.

LXIV.

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defac'd
The rich-proud cost of out-worn bury'd age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-raz'd,
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage:
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate—
That time will come, and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'er-sways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?
O, fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall times's best jewel from time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXVI.

Tir'd with all these, for restful death I cry,—
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully misplac'd,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrac'd,
And strength by limping away disabled,
And art made tongue-ty'd by authority,
And folly (doctor-like) controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:
Tir'd with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVII.

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And lace itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek,
And steal dead seeming of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had,
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVIII.

Thus is his cheek the map of days out-worn,
When beauty liv'd and died, as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were born,
(Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head:
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself, and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And hum as for a map doth nature store,
To show false art what beauty was of yore.

¹ 'Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head.'
In our author's time, the false hair, usually worn perhaps in compliment to the queen, was of a sandy colour. Hence the epithet, golden.—Malone.

LXIX.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view,
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;
All tongues (the voice of souls) give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thine outward thus with outward praise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own,
In other accents do this praise confound,
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then (churls) their thoughts, although their eyes were kind,
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The solve is this,—that thou dost common grow.

LXX.

That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being woo'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast pass'd by the ambush of young days,
Either not assail'd, or victor being charg'd;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy evermore enlarg'd:
If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts should'st owe.

LXXI.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead,
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you wo.
O if (I say) you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse;
But let your love even with my life decay:
Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit liv'd in me, that you should love
After my death,—dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I,
Than niggard truth would willingly impart:
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
For I am sham'd by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.

That time of year thou may'st in me behold,
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou seest the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west;
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou seest the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie;
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.
This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well, which thou must leave ere long:

LXXIV.

But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due:
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life
The prey of worms, my body being dead;
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that, is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.

So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground,
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon
Doubting the filching age will steal his treasure:
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure:
Some time all full with feasting on your sight,
And by and by clean starved for a look
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is had or must from you be took,
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.

Why is my verse so barren of new pride?
So far from variation or quick change?
Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,
That every word doth almost tell my name;
Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
O know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love still telling what is told.

LXXVII.

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy minds imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning may'st thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show,
Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth may'st know
Time's thievish progress to eternity,
Look, what thy memory cannot contain,
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nurs'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXVIII.

So oft have I invoc'd thee for my muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes, that taught the dumb, on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
But thou art all my art, and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance,

LXXIX.

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace;
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd,
And my sick muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen;
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
He robs thee of, and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give,
And found it in thy cheek; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-ty'd, speaking of your fame?
But since your worth, (wide, as the ocean is,)
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building, and of goodly pride:
Then if he thrive, and I be cast away,
The worst was this;—my love was my decay.

LXXXI.

Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten;
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read;
And tongues to be, your being shall rehearse,
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live, (such virtue hath my pen,) [men.
Where breath most breathes—even in the mouths of LXXXII.

I grant thou wert not married to my muse,
And therefore may'st without attaint o'er-look
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise;
And therefore art enforc'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devis'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair wert truly sympathiz'd
In true plain words, by thy true telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better us'd
Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abus'd.

LXXXIII.

I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set;
I found, or thought I found you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt:
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you yourself, being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I impair not beauty, being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes,
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXIV.

Who is it that says most? which can say more,
Than this rich praise—that you alone are you?
In whose confine immured is the store,
Which should example where your equal grew.
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell,
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired every where.
You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.

My tongue-ty'd muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly compil'd,
Reserve their character with golden quill,
And precious phrase by all the muses fill'd.
I think good thoughts whilst others write good words,
And, like unletter'd clerk, still cry Amen
To every hymn that able spirit affords,
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you praise'd, I say, 'tis so, 'tis true,
And to the most of praise add something more;
But that is in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.
Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all-too-precious you,
That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhere,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
No, neither he, nor his compeers by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost,
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence;
As victors, of my silence cannot boast;
I was not sick of any fear from thence;
But when your countenance fill'd up his line,
Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVII.

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate;
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but waking, no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
And place my merit in the eye of Scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight,
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn.
With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted;
That thou, in losing me, shalt win much glory;
And I by this will be a gainer too;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.
Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
 And I will comment upon that offence:
 Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt,
 Against thy reasons making no defence.
 Thou canst not love, disgrace me half so ill,
 To set a form upon desired change,
 As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
 I will acquaintance strangle, and look strange;
 Be absent from thy walks; and in my tongue
 Thy sweet-beloved name no more shall dwell;
 Lest I (too much profane) should do it wrong,
 And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
 For thee, against myself I'll vow debate,
 For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
 Now while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
 Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
 And do not drop in, for an after-loss:
 Ah! do not, when my heart hath scap'd this sorrow,
 Come in the rearward of a conquer'd wo;
 Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
 To linger out a purpos'd overthrow.
 If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
 When other petty griefs have done their spite,
 But in the onset come; so shall I taste
 At first the very worst of fortune's might;
 And other strains of wo, which now seem wo,
 Compar'd with loss of thee, will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
 Some in their wealth, some in their body's force;
 Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill;
 Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse;
 And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
 Wherein it finds a joy above the rest;
 But these particulars are not my measure,
 All these I better in one general best.
 Thy love is better than high birth to me,
 Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,
 Of more delight than hawks or horses be;
 And having thee, of all men's pride I boast.
 Wretched in this alone, that thou may'st take
 All this away, and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
 For term of life thou art assured mine;
 And life no longer than thy love will stay,
 For it depends upon that love of thine.
 Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
 When in the least of them my life hath end.
 I see a better state to me belongs
 Than that which on thy humour doth depend:
 Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
 Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
 O, what a happy title do I find,
 Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
 But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?
 Thou may'st be false, and yet I know it not:

XCIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
 Like a deceived husband; so love's face
 May still seem love to me, though alter'd new;
 Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:
 For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
 Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
 In many's looks the false heart's history
 Is writ, in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange;
 But heaven in thy creation did decree,
 That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
 Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
 Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
 How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
 If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

S Y

XCIV.

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
 That do not do the thing they most do show,
 Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
 Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow;
 They rightly do inherit heaven's graces,
 And husband nature's riches from expense;
 They are the lords and owners of their faces,
 Others but stewards of their excellence.
 The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
 Though to itself it only live and die;
 But if that flower with base infection meet,
 The basest weed outraves his dignity:
 For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds:
 Lilies that fester, smell far worse than weeds.

XCV.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame,
 Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
 Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name?
 O, in what sweets dost thou thy sins enclose!
 That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
 Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
 Cannot dispraise but in a kind of praise;
 Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
 O, what a mansion have those vices got,
 Which for their habitation chose out thee?
 Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
 And all things turn to fair that eyes can see!
 Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege;
 The hardest knife ill-us'd doth lose his edge.

XCVI.

Some say, thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
 Some say, thy grace is youth, and gentle sport;
 Both grace and faults are lov'd of more and less:
 Thou mak'st faults graces that to thee resort.
 As on the finger of a throned queen
 The basest jewel will be well esteem'd;
 So are those errors that in thee are seen,
 To truths translated, and for true things deem'd.
 How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
 If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
 How many gazers might'st thou lead away,
 If thou would'st use the strength of all thy state!
 But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
 As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XCVII.

How like a winter hath my absence been
 From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
 What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen?
 What old December's bareness every where!
 And yet this time remov'd! was summer's time;
 The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
 Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
 Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:
 Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
 But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
 For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
 And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
 Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
 That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

XCVIII.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
 When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
 Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing;
 That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him.
 Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell
 Of different flowers in odour and in hue,
 Could make me any summer's story tell,
 Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew.
 Nor did I wonder at the lilies white,
 Nor praise the deep vermillion in the rose;
 They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
 Drawn after you; you pattern of all those.
 Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
 As with your shadow I with these did play;

XCIX.

The forward violet thus did I chide; — [smells,
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that
If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells,
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dy'd.
The lily I condemned for thy band,
And buds of marjoram had stolen thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stolen of both,
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
But sweet or colour it had stolen from thee.

C.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power, to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem,
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, restive Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised every where.
Give my love fame faster than Time wastes life;
So thou prevent'st his scythe, and crooked knife.

CI.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends,
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dy'd?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So dost thou, too, and therein dignify'd.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not haply say,
Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth no lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd?
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for it lies in thee
To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
And to be prais'd of ages yet to be.
Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

CII.

My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seem-
I love not less, though less the show appear: [ing;
That love is merchandis'd, whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish every where.
Our love was new, and then but in the spring,
When I was wont to greet it with my lays;
As Philomel in summer's front doth sing,
And stops his pipe in growth of ripper days;
Not that the summer is less pleasant now
Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music burdens every bough,
And sweets grown common lose their dear delight.
Therefore, like her, I sometime hold my tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.

Alack! what poverty my muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument, all bare, is of more worth,
Than when it hath my added praise beside.
O, blame me not, if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face,
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful, then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend,
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell;
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit,
Your own glass shows you, when you look in it.

CIV.

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were, when first your eye I ey'd,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd,
In process of the seasons have I seen;
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceiv'd;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceiv'd:
For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred,—
Ere you were born, was beauty's summer dead.

CV.

Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be,
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse to constancy confin'd,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
Fair, kind, and true, is all my argument,
Fair, kind, and true, varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
Fair, kind, and true, have often liv'd alone,
Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

CVI.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme,
In praise of ladies dead, and lovely knights,
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a confin'd doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endur'd,
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;
Uncertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and death to me subscribes,
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.

What's in the brain that ink may character,
Which hath not figur'd to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what new to register,
That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same;
Counting no old thing odd, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's free case
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page;
Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CIX.

O, never say that I was false of heart,
 Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify.
 As easy might I from myself depart,
 As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie :
 That is my home of love : if I have rang'd,
 Like him that travels, I return again ;
 Just to the time, not with the time exchang'd,—
 So that myself bring water for my stain.
 Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
 All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
 That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
 To leave for nothing all thy sum of good ;
 For nothing this wide universe I call,
 Save thou, my rose ; in it thou art my all.

CX.

Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
 And made myself a motley to the view ;
 God'd mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most
 Made old offences of affections new : [dear,
 Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
 Askance and strangely ; but, by all above,
 These blenches gave my heart another youth,
 And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
 Now all is done, save what shall have no end :
 Mine appetite I never more will grind
 On newer proof, to try an older friend,
 A god in love, to whom I am confin'd.
 Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
 Even to thy pure and most, most loving breast.

CXI.

O, for my sake, do you with fortune chide,
 The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
 That did not better for my life provide
 Than public means, which public manners breeds.
 Thence comes it that my name receives a brand ;
 And almost thence my nature is subdu'd
 To what it works in, like the dyer's hand :
 Pity me then, and wish I were renew'd ;
 Whilst like a willing patient, I will drink
 Potions of eysell, 'gainst my strong infection ;
 No bitterness that I will bitter think,
 Nor double penance to correct correction.
 Pity me, then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
 Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
 Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow ;
 For what care I who calls me well or ill,
 So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow ?
 You are my all-the-world, and I must strive
 To know my shames and praises from your tongue ;
 None else to me, nor I to none alive,
 That my steel'd sense or changes, right or wrong.
 In so profound abyss I throw all care
 Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
 To critic and to flatterer stopped are.
 Mark how with my neglect I do dispense :—
 You are so strongly in my purpose bred,
 That all the world besides methinks they are dead.

CXIII.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind ;
 And that which governs me to go about,
 Doth part his function, and is partly blind,
 Seems seeing, but effectually is out :
 For it no form delivers to the heart
 Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch ;
 Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
 Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch ;
 For if it see the rud'st or gentlest sight,
 The most sweet favour, or deformed'st creature,
 The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
 The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature :
 Incapable of more, replete with you,
 My most true m'n'l thus maketh mine untrue.

CXIV.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
 Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery,
 Or whether shall I say, mine eye saith true,
 And that your love taught it this alchymy,
 To make, of monsters and things indigest,
 Such cherubims as your sweet self resemble ;
 Creating every bad a perfect best,
 As fast as objects to his beams assemble ?
 O, 'tis the first ; 'tis flattery in my seeing,
 And my great mind most kingly drinks it up :
 Mine eye well knows what with his gust is 'greeing,
 And to his palate doth prepare the cup :
 If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
 That mine eye loves it, and doth first begin.

CXV.

Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
 E'en those that said I could not love you dearer ;
 Yet then my judgment knew no reason why
 My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
 But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
 Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of kings :
 Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'st intents,
 Divert strong minds to the course of altering things ;
 Alas ! why, fearing of time's tyranny,
 Might I not then say, now I love you best,
 When I was certain o'er uncertainty,
 Crowning the present, doubting of the rest ;
 Love is a babe : then might I not say so,
 To give full growth to that which still doth grow ?

CXVI.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
 Admit impediments. Love is not love
 Which alters when it alteration finds,
 Or bends with the remover to remove :
 O no ! it is an ever-fixed mark,
 That looks on tempests, and is never shaken ;
 It is the star to every wandering bark, [taken.
 Whose worth's unknown, although his height be Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
 Within his bending sickle's compass come ;
 Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
 But bears it out cut e'en to the edge of doom.
 If this be error, and upon me prov'd,
 I never writ, nor no man ever lov'd.

CXVII.

Accuse me thus ; that I have scanted all
 Wherein I should your great deserts repay ;
 Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
 Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day ;
 That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
 And given to time your own dear purchas'd right ;
 That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
 Which should transport me farthest from your sight,
 Book both my wilfulness and errors down,
 And on just proof, surmise accumulate,
 Bring me within the level of your frown,
 But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate :
 Since my appeal says, I did strive to prove
 The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXVIII.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
 With eager compounds we our palate urge ;
 As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
 We sicken to shun sickness, when we purge ;
 E'en so, being full of your ne'er cloying sweetness,
 To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
 And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meetness
 To be diseas'd, ere that there was true needing,
 Thus policy in love, to anticipate
 The ills that were not, grew to faults assured,
 And brought to medicine a healthful state,
 Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured,
 But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
 Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

CXIX.

What potions have I drunk of Syren tears,
 Distill'd from limbecks foul as hell within,
 Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to fears,
 Still losing when I saw myself to win!
 What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
 Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
 How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted,
 In the distraction of this madding fever!
 O benefit of ill! now I find true
 That better is by evil still made better;
 And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
 Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
 So I return rebuk'd to my content,
 And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXX.

That you were once unkind, befriends me now,
 And for that sorrow, which I then did feel,
 Needs must I under my transgression bow,
 Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
 For if you were by my unkindness shaken,
 As I by yours, you've pass'd a hell of time;
 And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
 To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime.
 O that our night of wo might have remember'd
 My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits,
 And soon to you, as you to me, then tender'd
 The humble salve which wounded bosoms fits!
 But that your trespass now becomes a fee;
 Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom me.

CXXI.

'Tis better to be vile, than vile esteem'd,
 When not to be receives reproach of being,
 And the just pleasure lost, which is so deem'd
 Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing.
 For why should others' false adulterate eyes
 Give salutation to my sportive blood?
 Or on my frailties why are frailer spies,
 Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
 No,—I am that I am; and they that level
 At my abuses, reckon up their own:
 I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel;
 By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
 Unless this general evil they maintain,
 All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXXII.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
 Full character'd with lasting memory,
 Which shall above that idle rank remain,
 Beyond all date, even to eternity:
 Or at the least so long as brain and heart
 Have faculty by nature to subsist:
 Till each to razed oblivion yield his part
 Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd,
 That poor retention could not so much hold,
 Nor need I tallies, thy dear love to score;
 Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
 To trust those tables that receive thee more:
 To keep an adjunct to remember thee,
 Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXXIII.

No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change:
 Thy pyramids built up with newer might
 To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
 They are but dressings of a former sight.
 Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
 What thou dost foist upon us that is old;
 And rather make them born to our desire,
 Than think that we before have heard them told.
 Thy registers and thee I both defy,
 Not wondering at the present nor the past;
 For thy records and what we see do lie,
 Made more or less by thy continual haste:
 This I do vow, and this shall ever be,
 I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

CXXIV.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
 It might for fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
 As subject to Time's love, or to Time's hate, Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers
 gather'd.

No, it was builded far from accident;
 It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
 Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
 Whereto the inviting time our fashion calls:
 It fears not policy, that heretic,
 Which works on leases of short-number'd hours,
 But all alone stands hugely politic,
 That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.

To this I witness call the fools of time,
 Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime

CXXV.

Were it aught to me I bore the canopy,
 With my extern the outward honouring,
 Or laid great bases for eternity,
 Which prove more short than waste or ruining?
 Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
 Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent;
 For compound sweet forgoing simple savour,
 Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
 No;—let me be obsequious in thy heart,
 And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
 Which is not mix'd with seconds,¹ knows no art,
 But mutual render, only me for thee.
 Hence, thou suborn'd informer! a true soul
 When most impeach'd, stands least in thy control.

CXXVI.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
 Dost hold Time's sickle glass, his sickle, hour;
 Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
 Thy lovers withering, as thy sweet self grow'st
 If nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
 As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee back,
 She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
 May time disgrace, and wretched minutes kill.
 Yet fear her, O, thou minion of her pleasure;
 She may detain, but not still keep her treasure:
 Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
 And her quietus is to render thee.

CXXVII.

In the old age black was not counted fair,
 Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
 But now is black beauty's successive heir,
 And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
 For since each hand hath put on nature's power,¹
 Fairing the foul with art's false-borrow'd face,
 Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy hour,
 But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
 Therefore my mistress' eyes are raven black,
 Her eyes so suited; and they mourners seem
 At such, who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
 Slandering creation with a false esteem:
 Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
 That every tongue says, beauty should look so.

CXXVIII.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
 Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
 With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
 The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,
 Do I envy those jacks, that nimble leap
 To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
 Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap
 At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand!
 To be so tickled, they would change their state
 And situation with those dancing chips,
 O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
 Making dead wood more bless'd than living lips.
 Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
 Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

¹ 'Which is not mix'd with seconds.'—Seconds is a provincial term for the second kind of flour, which is collected after the smaller bran is sifted.—Steevens.

CXXIX.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjur'd, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
Enjoy'd no sooner, but despised straight;
Past reason hunted; and, no sooner had,
Past reason hated, as a swallow'd bait,
On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof,—and prov'd a very woe;
Before, a joy propos'd; behind, a dream:
All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

CXXX.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red:
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun,
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak,—yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go,—
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground:
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she, bely'd with false compare.

CXXXI.

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou know'st to my dear dotting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say, that thee behold,
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan:
To say they err, I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear,
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place.
In nothing art thou black, save in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXXII.

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart, torment me with disdain;
Have put on black, and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the gray cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that ushers in the even,
Doth half that glory to the sober west,
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O, let it then as well beseech thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear, beauty herself is black,
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.

Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engross'd;
Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken;
A torrent thrice threefold thus to be cross'd.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Who'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my gail;
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

CXXXIV.

So now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgag'd to thy will;
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous, and he is kind;
He learn'd but, surety-like, to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend, came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me;
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy will,
And wilt to boot, and will in overplus:
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in will, add to thy will
One will of mine, to make thy large will more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill:
Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

CXXXVI.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love-suit, sweet, fulfil.
Will will fulfil the treasure of thy love,
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one,
In things of great receipt with ease we prove,
Among a number one is reckon'd none.
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy store's account I one must be:
For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee;
Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lov'st me,—for my name is Will.

CXXXVII.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks,
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
Whereto the judgment of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot,
Which my heart knows the wide world's common
place?
Or mine eyes seeing this, say this is not?
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have err'd
And to this false plague are they now transferr'd.

CXXXVIII.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies;
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue;
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd,
But wherefore says she not, she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I, that I am old?
O love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love loves not to have years told.
Therefore I lie with her, and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.

CXXXIX.

O call not me to justify the wrong,
 That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
 Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue;
 Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
 Tell me thou lov'st elsewhere; but in my sight,
 Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside.
 What need'st thou wound with cunning, when thy might
 Is more than my o'erpress'd defence can 'bide?
 Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
 Her pretty looks have been mine enemies;
 And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
 That they elsewhere might dart their injuries:
 Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
 Kill me outright with looks, and rid my pain.

CXL.

Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
 My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain;
 Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
 The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
 If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
 Though not to love, yet, love to tell me so;
 (As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
 No news but health from their physicians know;) ;
 For if I should despair, I should grow mad,
 And in my madness might speak ill of thee:
 Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
 Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be,
 That I may not be so, nor thou belied,
 Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXLI.

In faith I do not love thee with mine eyes,
 For they in thee a thousand errors note;
 But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
 Who in despite of view is pleased to dote.
 Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted:
 Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
 Nor taste nor smell, desire to be invited
 To any sensual feast with thee alone:
 But my five wits, nor my five senses can
 Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
 Who lives unsway'd the likeness of a man,
 Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be;
 Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
 That she that makes me sin, awards me pain.

CXLII.

Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
 Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving;
 O but with mine compare thou thine own state,
 And thou shalt find it merits not reproving.
 Or if it do, not from those lips of thine,
 That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments,
 And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine;
 Robb'd others' beds' revenues of their rents;
 Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lovest those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
 Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows,
 Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
 If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
 By self-example may'st thou be denied!

CXLIH.

Lo, as a careful house-wife runs to catch
 One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
 Sets down her babe and makes all swift dispatch
 In pursuit of the thing she would have stay,
 Whilst her neglected child holds her in chace,
 Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
 To follow that which flies before her face,
 Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
 So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
 Whilst I, thy babe, chace thee afar behind;
 But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
 And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
 So will I pray that thou may'st have thy will,
 If thou turn back and my loud crying still.

CXLIV.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
 Which like two spirits do suggest me still;
 The better angel is a man right fair;
 The worser spirit a woman, colour'd ill.
 To win me soon to hell, my female evil
 Tempteth my better angel from my side,
 And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
 Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
 And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
 Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
 But being both from me, both to each friend,
 I guess one angel in another's hell.
 Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt
 Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLV.

Those lips that Love's own hand did make,
 Breath'd forth the sound that said, I hate,
 To me that languish'd for her sake:
 But when she saw my woful state,
 Straight in her heart did mercy come,
 Chiding that tongue, that ever sweet
 Was us'd in giving gentle doom;
 And taught it thus a-new to greet;
I hate she alter'd with an end,
 That follow'd it as gentle day
 Doth follow night, who, like a fiend,
 From heaven to hell is flown away;
I hate from hate away she threw,
 And sav'd my life, saying—not you.

CXLVI.

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
 Fool'd by those rebel powers that thee array
 Why dost thou pine within, and suffer dearth,
 Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
 Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
 Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
 Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
 Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
 Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
 And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
 Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
 Within be fed, without be rich no more:
 So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
 And, death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLVII.

My love is as a fever, longing still
 For that which longer nurseth the disease;
 Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
 The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
 My reason, the physician to my love,
 Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
 Hath left me, and I desperate now approve,
 Desire is death, which physic did except.
 Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
 And frantic-mad with ever-more unrest;
 My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
 At random from the truth vainly express'd;
 For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
 Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.

O me! what eyes hath love put in my head,
 Which have no correspondence with true sight!
 Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
 That censures falsely what they see aright?
 If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
 What means the world to say it is not so?
 If it be not, then love doth well denote Love's eye is not so true as all men's are;
 How can it? O, how can Love's eye be true,
 That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
 No marvel, then, though I mistake my view;
 The sun itself sees not, till heaven clears.
 O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
 Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
 When I, against myself, with thee partake?
 Do I not think on thee, when I forget
 Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
 Who hateth thee, that I do call my friend?
 On whom frown'st thou, that I do fawn upon?
 Nay, if thou low'st on me, do I not spend
 Revenge upon myself with present moan?
 What merit do I in myself respect,
 That is so proud thy service to despise,
 When all my best doth worship thy defect,
 Commanded by the motion of thine eyes!
 But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
 Those that can see thou lov'st, and I am blind.

CL.

O, from what power hast thou this powerful might,
 With insufficiency my heart to sway?
 To make me give the lie to my true sight,
 And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
 Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
 That in the very refuse of thy deeds
 There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
 That in my mind thy worst all best exceeds?
 Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
 The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
 O, though I love what others do abhor,
 With others thou should'st not abhor my state;
 If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
 More worthy I to be lov'd of thee.

CLI.

Love is too young to know what conscience is;
 Yet who knows not, conscience is born of love?
 Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
 Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.
 For, thou betraying me, I do betray
 My nobler part to my great body's treason;
 My soul doth tell my body that he may
 Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;
 But rising at thy name, doth point out thee
 As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
 He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
 To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
 No want of conscience hold it that I call
 Her—love, for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLII.

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
 But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing;
 In act thy bed-vow broke, and new faith torn,
 In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
 But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee
 When I break twenty? I am perjur'd most;
 For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
 And all my honest faith in thee is lost:
 For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
 Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy;
 And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
 Or made them swear against the thing they see;
 For I have sworn thee fair: more perjur'd I,
 To swear, against the truth, so foul a lie!

CLIII.

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep;
 A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
 And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
 In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
 Which borrow'd from this holy fire of love
 A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
 And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove,
 Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
 But at my mistress' eye love's brand new fir'd,
 The boy for trial needs would touch my breast
 I sick withal, the help of bath desir'd,
 And thither hied, a sad distemper'd guest,
 But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
 Where Cupid got new fire; my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.

The little love-god lying once asleep,
 Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
 Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep,
 Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
 The fairest votary took up that fire
 Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
 And so the general of hot desire
 Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
 This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
 Which from love's fire took heat perpetual,
 Growing a bath and healthful remedy
 For men diseas'd; but I, my mistress' thrall,
 Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
 Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
 A plaintful story from a sistering vale,
 My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
 And down I lay to list the sad-tun'd tale:
 Ere long espy'd a fickle maid full pale,
 Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
 Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
 Which fortified her visage from the sun,
 Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
 The carcase of a beauty spent and done.
 Time had not scythed all that youth begun,
 Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fell rage,
 Some beauty peep'd through lattice of sear'd age.

Of did she heave her napkin to her eyne,
 Which on it had conceited characters,
 Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
 That season'd wo had pelleted in tears,
 And often reading what contents it bears;
 As often shrieking undistinguish'd wo,
 In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her levell'd eyes their carriage ride,
 As they did battery to the spheres intend:
 Sometime diverted their poor balls are ty'd
 To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
 Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
 To every place at once, and no where fix'd,
 The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose, nor ty'd in formal plat,
 Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
 For some, untuck'd, descended her sheav'd hat,
 Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
 Some in her threaded fillet still did bide,
 And, true to bondage, would not break from thence,
 Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew
 Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet,
 Which one by one she in a river threw,
 Upon whose weeping margin she was set;
 Like usury, applying wet to wet,
 Or monarch's hands, that let not bounty fall
 Where want cries some, but where excess begs all.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Crack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
Found yet more letters sadly penn'd in blood,
With sleided silk feat and affectedly
Enswath'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.¹

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear;
Cry'd, O false blood! thou register of lies,
What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
Ink would have seem'd more black and damned here!
This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that graz'd his cattle nigh, (Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours,) observed as they flew;
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew;
And, privileg'd by age, desires to know
In brief, the grounds and motives of her wo.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,
And comely-distant sits he by her side;
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide:
If that from him there may be aught apply'd,
Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
'Tis promis'd in the charity of age.

Father, she says, though in me you behold
The injury of many a blasting hour,
Let it not tell your judgment I am old;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power:
I might as yet have been a spreading flower,
Fresh to myself, if I had self-apply'd
Love to myself, and to no love beside.

But wo is me! too early I attended
A youthful suit (it was to gain my grace)
Of one by nature's outwards so commended,
That maidens' eyes stuck over all his face!
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place;
And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodg'd, and newly deified.

His browny locks did hang in crooked curls;
And every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find;
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind;
For on his visage was in little drawn,
What largeness thinks in paradise wasawn.

Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
His phoenix down began but to appear,
Like unshorn velvet on that termless skin,
Whose bare out-bragg'd the web it seem'd to wear;
Yet show'd his visage by that cost most dear;
And nice affection's wavering stood in doubt
If best 'twere as it was, or best without.

His qualities were beauteous as his form,
For maiden-tongu'd he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men mov'd him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they be.
His rudeness so with his authoriz'd youth
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.

Well could he ride, and often men would say,
That horse his melle from his rider takes:
Proud of subjection, noble by the sway,
What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop he makes!

And controversy hence a question takes,
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

1 'With sleided silk, feat and affectedly
Enswath'd and sealed to curious secrecy.'

Anciently, the ends of a piece of narrow ribbon were placed under the seals of letters, to connect them more closely.—Steevens.

But quickly on this side the verdict went;
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament,
Accomplish'd in himself, not in his case:
All aids themselves made fairer by their place;
Came for additions, yet their purpos'd trim
Piec'd not his grace, but were all grac'd by him.

So on the tip of his subduing tongue
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All replication prompt, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep:
To make the weeper laugh, the laugher weep,
He had the dialect and different skill,
Catching all passions in his craft of will;

That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old; and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted:
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted;
And dialogu'd from him what he would say,
Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.

Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, their's in thought assign'd,
And labouring in more pleasures to bestow them,
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them.

So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly suppos'd them mistress of his heart.
My woful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, (not in part,)
What with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserv'd the stalk, and gave him all my flower.

Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired, yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid,
With safest distance I mine honour shielded:
Experience for me many bulwarks build'd
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.

But ah! who ever shunn'd by precedent
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or forc'd examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-pass'd perils in her way?
Counsel may stop a while what will not stay;
For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof;
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behoof.
O appetite, from judgment stand aloof!
The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
Though reason weep, and cry—it is thy last.

For further I could say, this man's untrue,
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling;
Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew
Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
Thought, characters, and words, merely but art,
And bastards of his foul adulterate heart.

And long upon these terms I held my city.
Till thus he 'gan besiege me: "Gentle maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to you sworn, to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never vow.

All my offences that abroad you see,
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not: with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind:
They sought their shame that so their shame did find,
And so much less of shame is me remains,
By how much less of me their reproach contains,

Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen,
Or any of my pleasures ever charm'd;
Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd;
Kept hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
And reign'd commanding in his monarchy.

Look here, what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of paled pearls, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

And lo! behold, these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd,
I have receiv'd from many a several fair,
(Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech'd,)
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sonnets, that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.
The diamond; why 'twas beautiful and hard,
Whereto his invis'd properties did 'tend;
The deep green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objects manifold: each several stone,
With wit well blazon'd, smil'd or made some moan.

Lo! all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensiv'd and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I heard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and end:
For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you enpatron me.

O, then, advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
What me, your minister, for you obeys,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distract parcels in combined sums.

Lo! this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

But O, my sweet, what labour is't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives?

Paling the place which did no form receive;—
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyves.
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

O pardon me, in that my boast is true;
The accident which brought me to her eye,
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly;
Religious love put out religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immur'd,
And now, to tempt all, liberty procur'd.

How mighty then you are, O, hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong,
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congeat,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

S Z

My parts had power to charm a sacred sun,
Who, disciplin'd and dieted in grace,
Believ'd her eyes, when they to assail begun,
All vows and consecrations giving place:
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

When thou impresses, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame?
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense,
'gainst shame;

And sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The aloes of all forces, shocks, and fears.

Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine;
And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath
That shall prefer and undertake my troth."

This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were level'd on my face;
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow'd apace:
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who, glaz'd with crystal gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue incloses.

O, father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear?
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O, cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extinction hath!

For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears:
There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
Shook off my sober guards and civil fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to caustels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows.

That not a heart which in his level came,
Could 'scape the hail of his all-hurting aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And veil'd in them, did win whom he would maim:
Against the thing he sought he would exclaim:
When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.

Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed fiend he cover'd;
That the unexperienc'd gave the tempter place,
Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd?
Ah me! I fell; and yet do question make,
What I should do again for such a sake.

O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forc'd thunder from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming ow'd,
Would yet again betray the fore betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid!

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.

SWEET Cytherea, sitting by a brook,
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there:
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.
But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refus'd to take her figur'd proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward;
He rose and ran away; ah, fool too froward?

II.

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing trarriance for Adonis made,
Under an oster growing by a brook,
A brook, where Adon us'd to cool his spleen:
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim;
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly, as this queen on him:
He spying her, boume'd in, whereas he stood;
O, Jove, quoth she, why was not I a flood?

III.

Fair was the morn, when the fair queen of love,
* * * *

Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a youngster proud and wild;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill:
Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds;
She, silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds;
Once, quoth she, did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!
See, in my thigh, quoth she, hero was the sore;
She showed hers; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

IV.

Venus with young Adonis sitting by her,
Under a myrtle shade began to woo him;
She told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
And as he fell to her, so fell she to him.
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god embrac'd me;
And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms;
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god unlac'd me;
As if the boy should use like loving charms:
Even thus, quoth she, he seized on my lips,
And with her lips on his did act the seizure;
And as she fetched breath, away he skips,
And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.
Ah! that I had my lady at this bay,
To kiss and clip me till I run away!

V.

Crabbed age and youth
Cannot live together;
Youth is full of pleasance,
Age is full of care:
Youth like summer morn,
Age like winter weather;

Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport,
Age's breath is short,
Youth is nimble, age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee,
Youth, I do adore thee;
O, my love, my love is young;
Age, I do defy thee;
O, sweet shepherd, hie thee,
For methinkst thou stay'st too long.

VI.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon faded,
Pluck'd in the bud, and faded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alack! too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting!
Like a green plumb that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, through wind, before the fall should be.
I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
For why? thou left'st me nothing in thy will.
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave,
For why? I craved nothing of thee still:
O, yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

VII.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle,
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is brittle,
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty:
A lily pale, with damask die to grace her,
None fairer, nor none fairer to deface her.

Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing!
How many tales to please me hath she coin'd,
Dreading my love, the loss thereof still fearing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.
She burn'd with love, as straw with fire flameth;
She burn'd out love, as soon as straw out-burneth;
She fram'd the love, and yet she foil'd the framing;
She bade love last, and yet she fell a turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VIII.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee;
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth doth shine.
Exhal'st this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then, it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To break an oath, to win a paradise?

IX.

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers

Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live, that art can comprehend.

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;

All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder.

Which (not to anger bent) is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O, do not love that wrong,
To sing the heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.

X.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good,
A shining gloss, that fadeth suddenly;
A flower that dies, when first it 'gins to bud;
A brittle glass that's broken presently;
A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
Lost, faded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as good lost are sold or never found,
As faded gloss no rubbing will refresh,
As flowers dead, lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress,
So beauty blemish'd once, for ever's lost.
In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.

XI.

Good night, good rest. Ah! neither be my share,
She bade good night, that kept my rest away;
And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care,
To descant on the doubts of my decay.
Farewell, quoth she, and come again to-morrow;
Fare well I could not, for I sup'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether:
'Tmay be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
'Tmay be, again to make me wander thither;
Wander, a word for shadows like thyself,
As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

XII.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the cast!
My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise
Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest.
Not daring trust the office of mine eyes,
While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and mark,
And wish her lays were tuned like the lark;

For she doth welcome day-light with her ditty,
And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night:
The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;
Sorrow chang'd to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow;
For why? she sigh'd, and bade me come to-morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon;
But now are minutes added to the hours;
To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;
Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
Pack night, peep day, good day, of night now borrow:
Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

XIII.

It was a lording's daughter, the fairest one of three,
That lik'd of her master as well as well might be;
Till looking on an Englishman, the fairest eye could see,

Her fancy fell a turning. [did fight,
Long was the combat doubtful, that love with love
To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight;

To put in practice either, alas, it was a spite
Unto the silly damsel.

But one must be refused, more nickle was the pain,
That nothing could be used, to turn them both to gain, [disdain:
For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with Alas, she could not help it!

Thus art with arms contending was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away;
Then lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady gaw;
For now my song is ended.

XIV.

On a day (alack the day!)
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spy'd a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow:
Air, would I might triumph so!
But alas! my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom Jove e'en would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

XV.

My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,

All is amiss:
Love's denying,
Faith's defying,
Heart's renying,
Causer of this.

All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot:
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is plac'd without remove.

One silly cross
Wrought all my loss;
O, frowning fortune, cursed, fickle dame!
For now I see,
Inconstancy

More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
All fears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,
Living in thrall:
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing,
(O cruel speeding!)

Fraughted with gall!
My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal,
My wether's bell rings doleful knell;
My curtail dog that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
My sighs so deep,
Procure to weep,
In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight.
How sighs resound
Through barkless ground,
Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!

Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Loud bells ring not Cheerfully;
Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back creeping

Fearfully:

All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost, for love is dead.

Farewell, sweet lass,
Thy like ne'er was,
For a sweet content, the cause of all my moan;
Poor Coridon
Must live alone,
Other help for him I see that there is none.

XVI.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou wouldst strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial tike :

Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young, nor yet unwe'd.

And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Lest she some subtle practice swell ;
(A cripple soon can find a halt :)

But paimly say thou lov'st her well,
And set thy person forth to sell.

And to her will frame all thy ways ;
Spare not to spend,—and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing always in her ear :

The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble, true ;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Seek never thou to choose anew :

When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will clear ere night ;
And then too late she will repent
That she dissembled her delight ;

And twice desire, ere it be day,
That with such scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say,—

*Had women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then.*

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.

Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought ?

Think, women love to match with men,
And not to live so like a saint :
Here is no heaven : they holy then
Begin, when age doth them attain.

Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But soft ; enough,—too much I fear ;
For if my lady hear my song,
She will not stick to ring mine ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long :

Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

XVII.

Take, oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn ;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn :

But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.

Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears :

But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

XVIII.

Let the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,

Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul pre-currer of the flood,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near !

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king :
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou, treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou giv'st and tak'st,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence :—
Love and constancy is dead ;
Phenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they lov'd, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one ;
Two distincts, division none :
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder ;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt the turtle and his queen :
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the Phenix' sight :
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appall'd,
That the self was not the same ;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together ;
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded ;

That it cried, how true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one !
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threne
To the Phenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love ;
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENOS.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here inclos'd in cinders lie.

Death is now the Phenix' nest ;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity :—
'Twas not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be ;
Beauty brag, but 'tis not she ;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair ;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.
